Tax Credit Proposed in War Bonds Sales Plan

40-Billion-Dollar Program Designed To Curb Trends Toward Inflation

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

A plan to wipe out the inflationary gap of surplus purchasing power by a program of tax-induced war bond purchases totaling some 40 billion dollars soon will be laid before War Stabilizer Fred M. Vinson by a high-ranking Capitol tax spokesman.

The plan, revolutionary in its effect on war financing, is designed to double the Treasury's voluntary bond sales, build up individual and corporate postwar reserves, and ease the threat of inflation by tax incentives to save.

Heart of the plan suggested as a substitute for the Administration's coming 12-billion-dollar tax program, would be allowable tax deductions for war bond purchases up to 15 per cent of individual or corporate taxable income.

Bonds Non-Negotiable

To claim this deduction, or any lesser percentage, individuals and corporations in effect would have to buy twice the amount of the deduction in war bonds.

As explained by a high Capitol tax authority, who asked not to be quoted at this time, taxpayers in order to benefit would have to exchange war bonds purchased during the taxable year, for an equivalent amount of nonnegotiable bonds that could not be redeemed until after the war. Then this amount would have to be duplicated in new purchases, subject to the 15 per cent limit, the new purchases could be deducted from the taxpayers' taxable income.

Proposed Adjustments

The legislative sponsor of the plan coupled these inducements to savings with the following proposed adjustments in taxes and spending which in his opinion, would meet the tax problem for 1943 and virtually balance Treasury receipts with war outgo:

1. An increase in the individual normal income tax rate from 6 to 8 or even 10 per cent. No surtax or exemption changes.

2. An increase in the corporate normal and surtax rate from 40 to 45 per cent.

3. An increase in the corporation excess profits tax from 90 to 95 per cent. (This mainly would have the effect of increasing corporate postwar credits, as the 80 per cent

WLB Doubts Right To Review NLRB

The War Labor Board yesterday expressed doubt that it had authority to review a decision by the National Labor Relations Board after attorneys for the CIO and AFL had disputed the question at a public hearing involving a threatened walkout at the Phelps-Dodge Corp. plant at Morenci, Ariz., world's second largest copper production center.

Navy Setup Changes

By Edward Ryan
Post Staff Writer

Navy Secretary Knox yesterday reshuffled five major aviation divisions in his department to systematize and intensify the fleet's air activities, but he reiterated the Navy's and his own opposition to a separate air force.

"There is no clamor in the Navy for a separate air arm," Knox told his press conference.

At another point he was asked whether the organization shakeup was to be interpreted as a move toward or away from a separate air force, and he said:

"It will be a step toward the desirable goal of the closest possible coordination between the fleet and its air force. It is definite recognition of the growing importance of aviation."

Secretary Knox was asked whether the change could be expected to intensify the Navy's air activities. He replied that it could be expected to "systematize" them, and "we hope it will intensify them."

Few Who Face Draft Register For War Jobs

Many Boards Ignore WMC Directive on Inducting Fathers

By Adele Bernstein
Post Staff Writer

Virtually no draft-threatened men here have responded this week to the WMC order requiring them to register their availability for essential jobs with the United States Employment Service if they now work in nondeferable occupations. R. Vernon Banta, District director, reported that many calls for information had been received at his office. But the promised influx of actual registrants has thus far failed to materialize.

Similarly, there has been no increase in the number of fathers applying for training in essential war work, according to Harold A. Clark, District supervisor of the United States Office of Education's vocational training program for war production. Others questioned on this aspect of the situation reminded the interviewer that "the War Manpower Commission cried 'wolf' once before."

Work or Fight

Designed to force thousands of able-bodied men under 38 either into war-vital jobs or into the armed forces, the regulations extended the original list of "nondeferable" occupations and ask local draft boards to reclassify into 1-A fathers who fail to put their "critical" skills at the service of the war effort by October 1.

The 25 District draft boards, a check revealed, are for the most part temporarily ignoring the directive. They are devoting their meetings to what spokesmen term "regular business"—classification of registrants as 2-A (essential civilian industries), 2-B (essential war

Wright Plant Threatened by Army Seizure

Truman Group Joins Warning to Boost Quantity and Quality

By John Frye
Associated Press Staff Writer

Cincinnati, Aug. 20.—The Truman war plant investigating committee and the Army Air Forces told the Wright Aeronautical Corp. in effect today to get into quality and quantity production at its huge plant in nearby Lockland or the Army would take over the factory.

After a three-hour public hearing in which company officials testified present production was one-sixth of that before the Truman Senate Committee made its first report last month, and one-twelfth of capacity, Chairman Harry S. Truman (Democrat) Missouri, told a press conference:

No Deadline Set

"The Lockland plant is one of the most perfectly tooled in the country, but it is also one of the worst managed we have found. The essence of the situation is this: There must be improvement of management or the Army will take it over."

Maj. Gen. Oliver P. Echols, Assistant Chief of Air Staff, testified at the hearing that such a step had been considered when production difficulties first developed, but that it was considered too drastic at the time.

Hugh Fulton, committee counsel, asked the general if the Army position was that it expected to get good management at Lockland or the present management must get out. General Echols said that was correct but added that no deadline had been set. Senator Truman said the company would

New U. S. Agency Given Task Of Salvaging Art Treasures

By International News Service

The State Department last night announced that President Roosevelt has approved establishment of a special American art commission to save and salvage the historic treasures of Europe from the ravages of total war.

The commission also signifies the intention of the United States that at the end of military operations public properties seized by the Axis powers in their drive toward world conquest shall be restored. The State Department declared:

"It is expected that the commission will use its good offices toward this end and will advocate also that, where it is not possible to restore such property, either because it has been destroyed or cannot be found, restitution shall be made in kind by the Axis powers to the countries from which property has been taken."

"The commission, it is anticipated, will also urge that restitution be made of private property appropriated by the Axis nations."

The group, it was explained, will function under the United States Government and in conjunction with similar groups from other countries for the preservation of the arts and historic records of the Old World.

It will aid in salvaging and restoring to the lawful owners such objects as have been appropriated by the Axis.

The commission will work closely with the appropriate branches of the State and War Departments.

In addition to Supreme Court Justice Owen D. Roberts, who is chairman, other officers are David E. Finley, director of the National Gallery of Art, vice chairman, and Huntington Cairnes, secretary-treasurer of the gallery, the same post with the commission.

Other members of the commission are Foreign Relief and Rehabilitation Director Herbert H. Lehman, Librarian of Congress Archibald MacLeish, President William Bell Dinsmoor, of the Archeological Institute of America; Director Francis Henry Taylor of New York's Metropolitan Museum, and Dr. Paul J. Sachs associate director of the Fogg Museum of Fine Arts, Harvard University.

Japs Flee Outer Lines At Salamaua

Abandon Guns, 350 Dead; Allies Mopping Up, Says MacArthur; Base Laid in Waste

By William F. Boni
Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in the Southwest Pacific (Saturday), Aug. 21.—Japanese jungle troops are in full flight from the mountain ridge defenses before Salamaua, New Guinea, and are falling back on the inner defenses of the air base, Gen. Douglas MacArthur announced today.

"The enemy is in full retreat to his inner citadel of defenses at Salamaua itself," a new communique reported.

Machine guns and artillery have been abandoned along with more than 350 buried dead.

Supplies Low

The Japanese troops, their supplies low as the result of Allied air attacks on coastal barges and their air support virtually wiped out on airdromes above Salamaua, suddenly gave up positions from which they long have held off Americans and Australians.

Today's communique disclosed that their defenses cracked wide open. All at once, they gave up Orodubi, five miles southeast of Salamaua, the nearby strong point of Komiatum and the Goodview Junction and Mount Tambu areas near the coast.

The day before General MacArthur's communique announced the capture on the Francisco River of Bobdubi River ridge, only 3 miles from the Salamau airdrome whose possession would put the Allies within easy fighter plane range of big Japanese holdings on New Britain.

Solid Line Forged

The new successes enabled the Allies to forge a solid line for their advance upon the airdrome and the town, built on an isthmus connecting the mainland with Cape Persee in the Huon Gulf.

The Allies now hold all the vital ridges. From Komiatum, a supply track runs near the airdrome only three and a half miles away. The Japanese now are expected to take up positions guarding the airfield.

Salamaua, which the Japanese have held since January, 1942, recently was laid in ruins by more than 1000 tons of bombs.

Twenty-four Japanese planes were destroyed and nine damaged in a new raid 350 miles up the coast of Wewak. This brought to 248 the number of enemy planes smashed there within a week. The

Reds' Kharkov Circling Hits Far in Ukraine

Lebedin Captured; Berlin Says Attack On Finland Starts

By the Associated Press

London (Saturday), Aug. 21.—Russia's new Steppe army smashed deep into the Ukraine almost 100 miles northwest of Kharkov to capture Lebedin, highwater mark of last winter's offensive, Moscow announced early today, while London reports indicated the Red Army had encircled all but 13 miles of Kharkov itself.

Lebedin is 100 miles from the starting point of the Soviet Ukrainian offensive near Belgorod and midway between captured Akhtyrka and threatened Sumy. The Russian column that took it apparently was aiming for the vital rail junction of Konotop on the Kiev-Bryansk railway, 70 miles to the northwest.

(The BBC quoted a Berlin broadcast as saying the Russians "are now attacking furiously at six widely separated points along a 1000-mile front" between Leningrad and Murmansk in the far north. NBC heard the BBC broadcast, which, if true, means the Russians are opening a new offensive on the long-stalemated Finnish front.)

A Moscow communique recorded by the Soviet monitor said a total of 6100 Germans were killed yesterday on all fronts.

On the Bryansk front the Soviets acknowledged fierce German opposition as they pounded on from

Time Out for Picnic

Quebec, Aug. 20.—The big four among the statesmen at the Quebec war conference—Roosevelt, Churchill, Hull and Eden—dined together at the Citadel tonight, charting the political strategy that is to accompany, precede, or follow the Allied military blows of the future.

It was first dinner of its kind ever held at an Anglo-American council of war. No military men were present — only President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Churchill and their chief advisers on foreign policy.

What they talked about was, like the military plans that are being hatched at the Chateau Frontenac and the Citadel, a profound secret.

Italy Certain Topic

But it would require no great powers of divination to guess that Italy was a major topic, and doubtless the most urgent one. Italy, from all indications, is about to become a battlefield. Hitler seems determined to make it one, with or without Italian help.

The task of the statesmen, in mapping their political strategy, is to end Italy's military resistance if possible, and if that isn't possible at least to undermine and lessen it. Already they have done much toward that end. If they are successful in the days ahead, the Germans may find Italy a disastrous battlefield, with Italians as well as Gen. Dwight Eisenhower's Army lined up against them.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King announced today that President Roosevelt was going from here to Ottawa next Wednesday. The President will be the guest of the

Nonstop Raids Continue Over West Europe

Flushing Airfield And Railway Yards At Abbeville Hit

By the Associated Press

London, Aug. 20.—A shuttle of Allied planes over Dover Strait and the distant rumble of gunfire today signaled the sixth day of virtually nonstop Allied aerial attacks concentrated on enemy airfields in western Europe.

An Air Ministry communique announced tonight that Mitchell medium bombers with Spitfire escort attacked enemy aircraft and a factory at Flushing in the Netherlands and that Boston mediums also escorted by Spitfires bombed railways and marshaling yards at Abbeville, France.

"One bomber is missing but the crew is safe," the communique added.

The attack on Flushing followed yesterday's Flying Fortress raid there.

These assaults came after RAF Mosquito bombers struck at Berlin last night and fighters pounced upon airfields and railway targets on the Continent.

Fifteen German airdromes had been hit in 26 attacks from Sunday morning to Thursday evening.

In that period, the Allies hammered home anew proof of their mastery of the air over western Europe.

They shot down 123 German fighters over the French coast, enemy airdromes and the Channel with loss of eight Flying Fortresses, one medium bomber, two fighter-bombers and 23 fighters. Fifty of the enemy planes were downed yesterday in raids upon four major air bases in Holland and France.

Every Army Branch to Show Its Most Modern Weapons

The M-3 submachine gun that a $25 war bond can create. It will be among the weapons at the "Back the Attack" pageant

Every branch of the United States Army will show its finest weapons and other material in the great "Back the Attack" show which opens in Washington on September 9.

Allotment of space to the various branches will be made this morning at a conference in the Pentagon. Each branch has asked the maximum space to show its own tasks—the sections of the Army are vying with one another to make this the greatest militafy display ever presented anywhere—to show the weapons your bonds are buying—the weapons bonds must build and pay for if America and the democracies are to win this war.

Sponsored by The Washington Post, "Back the Attack" is being arranged for the Capital by the United States Army at the request of the Treasury to coincide with the opening of the Third War Loan Drive.

The mere listing of the Army branches of the show which will take part indicates the magnitude of the display, which will cover the acres surrounding the Washington Monument. Planes, guns, tanks, bombs, kitchens, processed foods, medical supplies, uniforms, rafts, rifles, shells, flame-throwers—the whole panoply of war and the equipment of the supply services, without which a modern army can not move—will be shown to the thousands in the Nation's Capital.

Branches whose equipment will be shown include the Adjutant General's Office, the Army Air Forces, the Army Nurse Corps, the armored divisions, the Ordnance Department, the Quartermaster Corps, Motor Transport, the Signal Corps, the Cavalry, the Chaplains' Corps, the Chemical Warfare Service, the Coast Artillery, the Engineer Corps, the Field Ar-

Saboteurs Already at Work

Danes Aroused, Seek Decision On Continued Rule by Nazis

By John Colburn
Associated Press Staff Writer

Stockholm, Aug. 20.—Danish political leaders met in Copenhagen today to consider whether the government would back an open rebellion of the people against the Nazi occupation and war services, or yield part of its justice administration to the Germans.

The government of Premier Eric Scavenius appeared to seek a showdown between the rising public clamor for a new government with a more militant attitude toward Germans and the Berlin demands for a more submissive Denmark.

Details of the swelling campaign against Nazi rule were brought here by travelers arriving from Denmark today.

The meeting of the political leaders, which included all members of the Danish Parliament, was the first since a year ago when they put Scavenius at the head of the government.

With every indication no further concessions will be made to the Germans, however, there was the possibility Nazi Minister Werner Best would invoke some type of military authority over all of Denmark.

Such a step might precipitate a general strike. Danish labor leaders decided during the last week they would consent to slowdowns and strikes as a countermeasure to German efforts to punish saboteurs.

Besides blasting railway lines—especially those said to be carrying soldiers and supplies for Nazi occupation forces in Norway—the saboteurs hit at least 60 Danish factories in the last 10 days, a traveler said.

The drastic measures taken by the Germans to curb opposition in Norway has created bitter resentment among the Danes, who took the cue for their own stiffening belligerency from the success of the Swedish people in halting without reprisal the transport of German troops and war supplies over Swedish railways.

The reports from Denmark told of clashes between patriots and German soldiers in Odense, of the dynamiting of a Nazi rail supply line, of the killing of 15 German soldiers in riots in the Funen Island district which resulted in clamping on of an 8 p. m. curfew for the area, and of increased strikes, violence, sabotage and underground activity—all aimed at the Nazis.

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, Aug. 20.—Allied air fleets slashing at Italy's railroad sinews of defense blasted the communications center of Foggia in saturation blockbuster raids yesterday, while at sea American naval forces seized the Aeolian stepping-stone islands north of Sicily.

Heaviest Mediterranean Raid

The raid on Foggia, 20 miles inland from the east coast opposite Naples, was described officially as the heaviest of the Mediterranean war, and although the total number of planes participating was not specified, it was greater even than the total hurled against Rome in the first attack.

Seven hundred planes—500 bombers and 200 fighters—were used by the Allies in the Rome raid.

The rail city is one of the master bastions in any Axis blueprint for the defense of southern Italy.

The important industrial and communications center was left a seething mass of flame by three different types of bombers that attacked by daylight and darkness on a scale unparalleled in both size and ferocity in the Mediterranean war.

Flying Fortresses in double waves followed by formations of Liberators, struck the first blows. Their strings of bombs interlaced the freight yards, squarely hit a railway bridge and knocked out repair shops, warehouses, military barracks and set fire to a large number of freight and passenger cars.

But even then the "triple strength" raid wasn't ended.

As darkness fell, RAF Welling-

King Seen Expecting Occupation of Italy

Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles said yesterday it must be in King Vittorio Emanuele's mind that Allied troops soon will be occupying Italy as well as Sicily.

This, he told the press, he assumed to be the thought behind the King's radio message that Sicily would not be long isolated from Italy, without mentioning continuance of the war.

War Baby Boom Brings Boost in Gocarts, Strollers

The wartime boom in babies brought from the War Production Board yesterday an order for greatly increased output of carriages, walkers, strollers and sulkies.

Anticipating this year's crop of new youngsters will be the biggest ever, WPB authorized manufacture of 693,700 baby vehicles of all kinds in the last three months of this year—a boost of approximately 50 per cent over the current rate. Of the total, 349,000 will be carriages.

The birth rate has been increasing ever since the outbreak of the war. It advanced from 18.9 per thousand population in 1941 to 20.5 last year when approximately 2,800,000 babies were born.

The upward trend is usual in wartime. Sociologists say it is because many young people rush to marry in fear they may be separated by the war.

Silent on Fighting

Future Better, Italian King Tells Sicily

By William Smith White
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 20.—Italy was plainly a sick belligerent tonight, with her King issuing to the people of Sicily a proclamation which was silent about any intention to go on fighting the war. There was considerable feeling that Allied armies might move next against fresher and stronger objectives than the cracked Axis southern wall.

What the King told the people of Sicily in effect was that although they now are "cut off" from the rest of Italy and have for the present nothing but things to grieve about, they should hold faith "in a better future."

In this future, he said, Italy—and he presented the country as a wounded nation with more hope for the future than reasoned confidence for the present—would await her "resurrection."

'Future Will Reward'

"The future will bring a reward for your sufferings," the King said in the proclamation, which was broadcast by Rome radio.

"I have lived with you this terrible moment," the King told the Sicilians. "I have heard your voice. I have understood your sufferings.

"Italians of Sicily, your King is near to you."

He called insistently for Sicily's loyalty to the crown and the House of Savoy. For years the Sicilians have been regarded as tepid in regard to fascism.

A later Rome broadcast indicated that the proclamation was an attempt to forestall a separatist movement, rather than an implication that peace might be near at hand.

The second broadcast quoted the newspaper Il Messaggero as saying rumors had reached Italy that the Sicilians were trying to set up their own government.

Swiss Opinion

La Suissee of Geneva declared editorially that separatist feelings in Sicily, were complemented since Italy's entrance into the war by the fact that for nearly three years the British were so strongly checked in the Mediterranean that they preferred the long route around the Cape rather than Suez passage exposed to Italian and German attacks. The idea, the newspaper said, already has been expressed in some Anglo-Saxon publications that this could be avoided in the future by withholding Pantelleria and Sicily from Italian sovereignty.

King Vittorio Emanuele's proclamation was broadcast shortly after the Rome radio accused the Allies of bombing Italian cities indiscriminately and declared that no official reply had been received by the Badoglio government to its recent action in declaring Rome an open city.

(In Washington, Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles indicated nothing has been received from the Italian government to show any measures taken to make Rome an open city. He said that it remains to be ascertained whether in fact Rome is an open city.)

Sabotage Urged

London, Aug. 20 (AP).—The United Nations radio at Algiers called on the people of Calabria tonight to sabotage German military operations in southern Italy to prevent the Nazis from "transforming Italy into a battlefield."

"The Germans are using your trains and your installations in the war," the radio said. "They depend on you. They are in your power. It is up to you to impede their war operations on Italian soil."

Terms Their Swift Conquest of North Sicily Magnificent

By Noland Norgaard
Associated Press Staff Writer

Fifteenth Army Group Headquarters in Sicily, Aug. 20.—Gen. Sir Harold Alexander, commander of the Fifteenth Allied Army group, said today the swift conquest of northern Sicily by United States troops was "magnificent."

"I have never seen such remarkable military engineering accomplishments," he said.

Alexander disclosed that he had visited "those American friends of mine" during the fighting in the northern part of the island and observed engineering feats which "I would have never imagined possible."

"It was a wonderful feat," he continued. "The Americans went all the way from Palermo to Messina in a fortnight. Why, you would not hike that distance in a fortnight in peacetime. They built many miles of road overnight. In one instance, 15 bridges were blown up in 20 miles, but it delayed the Americans only a matter of hours."

Alexander commented also on the repeated American landings behind the enemy lines on the northern coast, which he explained succeeded in getting troops behind the retreating Germans and creating "terrific" havoc with enemy defense plans. He added that it resulted in bagging substantial numbers of prisoners who otherwise would have escaped.

He also credited Canadian forces with doing "extremely well."

The Allied victory in Sicily has put Germany "in a jam," Alexander asserted, referring particularly to the problem of defending the Italian mainland—"She (Germany) does not dare to entrust the key defense points to the Italians, but must depend upon the Italians to help man the coasts. We are closing in on them from all directions."

Knox Reshuffles 5 Air Divisions

Witt Clinton Ramsey. Both have seen war duty in the South Pacific.

The latest shifts are designed to give Admiral McCain the operating functions which had been in the Bureau of Aeronautics, leaving the latter with the material job exclusively. Affected are the planning, personnel, training, flight, and air information divisions.

Purpose of the changes, said Knox, was to separate the material procurement program from actual aviation operations. Admiral McCain has charge of the operating end, under Admiral Ernest King who is commander in chief of the fleet and chief of naval operations. McCain is also junior to Vice Admiral F. J. Horne, vice chief of naval operations.

Admiral Ramsey estimated that it would mean transfer of between 35 and 40 per cent of the officer personnel of the Bureau of Aeronautics into Admiral McCain's organization. The set-up will continue its present main outline, with the new branches of Admiral McCain's office to be called the aviation planning division, aviation personnel division, aviation training division, flight division and air information division.

What has been the aviation division of naval operations will be absorbed in the new staff setup, it was announced, except that the Naval Air Transport Service will continue its job as a separate division directly under Admiral McCain.

Aeronautics' Functions

In addition the director of Marine Corps Aviation and related Marine Corps officers now in the Bureau of Aeronautics were assigned directly to Admiral McCain's command.

Admiral Ramsey explained that the planning division had conducted long-range planning for planes, engines and other equipment ,and had coordinated plans for plane and personnel and carrier procurement, training and development of shore establishments to support the air force. A main job of the air information division, he said, has been to help appraise the limitations and potentialities of enemy planes, while the flight division has been primarily concerned with statistics and records of pilots.

At one point, Secretary Knox described the reorganization as being "in line with good sound business practice."

He pointed out that much of the work of planning for plane requirements, and recommending assignment of personnel had grown up with the Bureau of Aeronautics, but that "aviation has grown so important that these functions can better be handled outside a materiel bureau."

production) and examination of routine appeals for deferment and expired deferments.

"We have too much to do taking care of regular business to bother with that kind of nonsense," one board chairman said. "Of course," he added, "if we're actually told to draft fathers, I suppose we'll have to do it. But we'll see what Congress will do when it reconvenes this fall."

Another official interviewed also requested anonymity, but spared few expletives in stating his opinion of the WMC regulations.

"They'll probably just go on frightening the population," he declared. "Men can't do their jobs properly when threats like this are held over them."

French Warned To Turn In Guns

New York, Aug. 20 (AP).—A warning to the people of France to turn in all firearms to the Nazi occupation forces before next Tuesday was broadcast today by the German-controlled Paris radio, significantly on the heels of Allied radio warnings to prepare for invasion.

"Everyone knows that even the death penalty can be inflicted" on those found harboring weapons, the Nazi broadcast pointed out.

tons, guided by fires visible 80 miles away, loosed a cascade of 2000-pound blockbusters that spread the old fires and started new ones, and toppled the walls of buildings already undermined by the day assaults.

Italian and German fighters appeared in strength for the first time in several weeks to meet the first wave of raiders, but 38 of the attackers were shot down there.

The appearance of a large number of fighters sharply emphasized the importance Axis commanders place on this strategic point across the peninsula from Naples.

(Radio France in Algiers said that "for 24 hours now Allied artillery, air forces and naval units have been plastering Southern Italy in one of the most formidable combined attacks ever seen.")

Other bomber squadrons ripped up rail lines and targets south of Naples and elsewhere—downing six more Axis planes—and British warships joined this phase of the softening attack by hurling shells into Scalea, on the west coast of the Calabrian Peninsula. The downing of 44 enemy planes was achieved at a cost of 17 Allied craft, although the losses over Foggia were not given separately.

Fall of volcanic Lipari and Stromboli Tuesday put all seven of the islands in Allied possession, headquarters announced today, winning absolute control of the sea between Sicily and lower Italy and improving positions for any jump onto the mainland.

British Navy Shells Scalea

Seizure of Lipari, largest of the Aeolian islands, and Stromboli apparently was unopposed.

Stromboli is but 37 miles from Cape Vaticano, well up on the Italian boot, and Lipari lies 35 miles northwest of Messina. Italy had used them as forward observation points. Although they can handle only small boats, they would be strategically important in invasion of the Italian mainland.

The hail of heavy bombs at Foggia was reminiscent of raids that rubbed out defense centers of Sicily.

Two waves of Flying Fortresses knocked down 28 enemy defenders, Lightning escorts accounted for 6 more, and United States Liberators, flying in from the Middle East to make it a two-way assault, sent down 4 others. The Liberators alone delivered a bomb load of 330,000 pounds.

Salermo Rail Yards Hit

Meanwhile Mitchells escorted by Lightnings dared heavy antiaircraft fire to put bomb bursts on railroad yards at Salerno, south of Naples, and Marauders wrecked a big oil installation at Sapri while their Lightning protectors swooped down to punish railway cars and shops there.

Fighter bombers hit Catanzaro, communications center on the sole of the Italian boot, and Wellingtons returned to Sapri by night and also bombed Paolo on the Italian instep.

Wright Plant Put In Peril of Seizure

"get reasonable time" to improve production.

Guy W. Vaughn, president of the parent Curtiss-Wright Corporation, said conditions responsible for the production decline were being remedied and that the plant would resume its previous pace in two or three months. However, he said, a substantial increase in employes would be imperative to achieve the capacity for which the 55 million dollar plant, the largest one-floor factory in the world, was designed.

Vaughn's Theory on Drop

Vaughn denied committee members' assertions that the tremendous drop in production after the first committee report was blamed by the company on too-strict Army inspection. The original report asserted that defective engines were passing company inspection.

Vaughn blamed the decline partly on excessive "tightening up" by employes fearful of losing their jobs if they turned out substandard work; the time necessary to improve company inspection; and operational difficulties encountered.

Soviet Labor Magazine Asks 3-Power Parley

By Henry C. Cassidy
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow, Aug. 20.—The Soviet labor magazine War and the Working Class" called today for a three-power conference of Britain, Russia and the United States with the aims of shortening the war and preparing for peace on the basis of friendly collaboration among the Allies.

In an editorial entitled "Quebec and the Soviet Union," the magazine said that the conferences between President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill were "serving the interests of the Anglo-American Forces" but did not "express the opinion of the entire Anglo-Soviet-American coalition."

Reiterates Demand

The editorial again presented the Soviets' demand for another fighting front in Europe, saying, "the time is ripe to inflict a decisive blow from the east and west. The time is ripe to change over from words to actions."

Victory over Germany is still possible this year, it said.

Commenting on British and American press articles, the article said many newspapers forget that the conference is a British-American affair and discuss the participation and nonparticipation of the Soviet Union, although a Tass statement of August 13 explained the Soviets were not invited.

In the same vein, the magazine in another article said a Russian representative had been delayed for two months from entering into contact with the French Committee of National Liberation at Algiers because of "objections from Anglo-American authorities for supposedly military reasons."

Awaits Solution

"The French question awaits its solution," the magazine said.

It pointed out that the Soviet Union had recognized the fighting French committee of Gen. Charles de Gaulle and added that it had even more reason for a positive attitude toward the new committee, representing both major French factions.

In Washington, Undersecretary of State Welles was asked at his press conference for comment on the editorial. He replied that the United States was anxious at all times to cooperate with the Soviet Union in every possible way which might help in the winning of the war.

Russians Press Far Into Ukraine

captured Karachev, 25 miles to the east. Farther north, in the Spas Demensk offensive, the Russians were moving between the two railroads leading to Smolensk roughly 75 miles northwestward.

In the Ukraine offensive over 20 towns and villages fell to driving columns northwest of Kharkov, said the communique. The Germans countered with fresh infantry and tanks in an effort to stem the Red army advance.

Opposing tanks crashed over the countryside in a weaving battle of armor but the Germans receded after 45 of their tanks were disabled by Soviet fire. Victorious Russians captured fuel and ammunition supplies as the Germans fled, the bulletin added.

A number of fortified places were reported captured by the Russians southeast of Kharkov. It was in this general area that the last German escape corridor narrowed to a single railway. The Germans were making every suburban crossroads a resistance center in their effort to delay the complete encirclement of the city.

Soviet planes were soaring over the ground troops, crushing enemy pillboxes and strong points in the fourth battle for Kharkov. Russian troops on the east and southeast last were reported only a few miles outside the city, and for a week shock troops have been battering reinforced Germans in the northeastern suburbs.

In the Bryansk fighting the Germans fell back to well-prepared defense positions and "offered stiff resistance," the communique said.

Strong points southwest of Spas Demensk fell to the Russians after two battalions of defending Germans were wiped out. The dogged Germans brought up more reserves and counterattacked, but failed to regain the position and the Soviets pressed on, Moscow said.

The Russian advances here threatened to pierce a whole series of German defenses between Bryansk and Smolensk, the central front anchor.

Soviet troops wrecked 124 German tanks and brought down 118 enemy planes in Thursday's fighting, the communique said.

German reserves in battalion strength charged time and again, trying to halt the Russians, but Red Star said the advance continued slowly and carefully.

Japs' Carrier Force Equal to Ours—Ramsey

Rear Admiral DeWitt Clinton Ramsey said yesterday that the Japanese are now believed to have aircraft carrier forces approximately equal in strength to our own.

Admiral Ramsey, back from duty in the South Pacific, where he commanded a carrier task force, to take charge of the Navy's Bureau of Aeronautics, told reporters that the Japs have powerful battle units in the ocean area north of the Solomons and New Guinea battleground, but that they are afraid to come south and "take a licking."

"We've been in scraps, yes," Admiral Ramsey told a questioner, "but not recently because I think our enemy is loathe to bring his strong forces to the South Pacific area."

Reason for Reluctance

"They just don't want to take a pretty bad licking," he observed.

Admiral Ramsey said strong Japanese task forces, complete with aircraft carriers "most certainly do" exist farther toward the north.

The enemy's reluctance to come to grips with the Americans in the area around the Solomons and New Guinea, he said, was due to the combination of our surface strength and preponderant air power in that area.

As for Japan's flat tops, Admiral Ramsey said that he believed they had improved their carrier position since the Battle of Midway last year. At that time, he pointed out, the Japs lost two carriers of a class comparable to America's Lexington.

Gain by Conversions

Since then, he said, the Japanese had increased their carrier strength by several important conversions.

As for Japan's air strength, recently damaged by heavy blows in the South Pacific, Admiral Ramsey said: "I believe we have underestimated the Japanese productive capacity."

"They show ability to replace their losses which is somewhat astounding," he observed, then added that while they are making replacements, they are not gaining in strength. He said he believed that 750 planes a month was a "minimum figure" for Jap plane production.

other 215 out of a fleet of 225 which might have supported the Salamaua garrison were wiped out in raids Tuesday and Wednesday. Friday 66 more tons of bombs were dropped there on air reinforcements.

We lost two planes bringing to eight the total expended in delivering the staggering blow to the Japanese.

Enemy Ship Sunk

In the Solomons area, today's communique reported that patrolling United States naval units had sunk one of two small enemy ships sighted off Doveli, on the northeast coast of Vella Lavella Island. Doveli is the point where more than 100 Japanese troops perished last Wednesday morning as American warships blew up the barges on which they were being moved toward Doveli Bay.

No mention was made of the fighting on New Georgia, where Americans are inching toward Bairoko, last enemy base on that island.

U. S. Army Rejects Archduke Otto

New York, Aug 20 (INS).—The Army ruled today—without explanation—that 33-year-old Archduke Otto von Hapsburg, pretender to the Austrian throne, is neither "qualified nor acceptable" for United States military service. Notification of the Army's stand was sent to Otto's draft board in New York.

With Japan

U. S. Requests 2d Exchange Of Prisoners

By the Associated Press

Hundreds of American civilians interned by Japan may be home for Christmas—if Tokyo will give assurances of safety for an exchange ship.

Sumner Welles, Acting Secretary of State, announced at his press conference yesterday that safe conduct had been requested for the Swedish liner Gripsholm and that the Government has "good reason to hope" a second exchange of Japanese for American civilians can be carried out in Portuguese India by October 15.

Most of the internees have been in Japanese hands since December 7, 1941.

The first exchange of Japanese for American civilians took place a year ago, when the Gripsholm carried Japanese diplomats and civilians from the United States to Lourenco Marques, Portuguese East Africa, and brought home some 1500 Americans carried to the African port in a Japanese ship and an Italian liner.

Welles did not say when the list of Americans expected home on the Gripsholm would be made public. Last year the passenger list was not issued until the Americans were safely aboard the exchange ship.

The Gripsholm will carry packages for prisoners of war as well as for civilian internees. The War Department Wednesday night advised all persons authorized to send such packages that they must be delivered in New York before midnight of August 27.

Earl of Athlone, the governor general, and his consort, the Princess Alice.

The President, the announcement said, will address members of the Senate and House of Commons on Parliament Hill at noon, after which he will return to Government House for luncheon with the Governor General and her royal highness.

Stephen Early, White House secretary, told reporters that President Roosevelt would spend only one day in Ottawa—Wednesday. Asked if the President would then go to Washington, Mr. Early said he would "head in that general direction."

Official word came from the Citadel today that President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill were so well caught up on the military phase of their work that they were able to take a day off and go on a picnic.

They took advantage of this by journeying to a lake described as 40 or 50 miles south of Quebec.

With them went Mrs. Churchill, Harry L. Hopkins, the President's confidante; W. Averill Harriman, lend-lease expediter; Rear Admiral Wilson Brown, Mr. Roosevelt's naval aide, and Commander C. R. Thompson, personal assistant to Mr. Churchill.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull arrived in Quebec this afternoon at 1:35 o'clock. He was met by Prime Minister Mackenzie King.

On his way up, he told newsmen in Montreal that he was coming to Quebec to take part in discussions of a political nature in connection with present and postwar problems.

Hull went to the Chateau Frontenac, which is to be his abode while in Quebec.

It has been predicted here, but without any official support, that the Quebec conference will do something in the way of extending official recognition to the French National Committee of Liberation, and also take steps to improve relations between the western Allies and Soviet Russia.

The Washington Post correspondent has been told on good authority that relations between Washington, London and Moscow are much better than many worried "observers" think they are.

Unequal Fight By Fortress Told by Flier

By Hanson H. Hathaway
Post Staff Writer

Staff Sergt. Conrad Kicklighter, 22, of Daytona Beach, Fla., who liked hunting so much he got a job in a sporting goods store just to be with guns, tackle and camp gear, told his story yesterday.

It was about a lost Flying Fortress, strayed off course through a signal mixup. Its astonished crew found themselves above a Nazi airdrome somewhere in France.

They saw six confident Focke-Wulf fighters racing up. The fight that followed was "something." But here's Sergeant Kicklighter, himself:

"We were coming back from our ninth straight bombing mission near Lorient," he began. "I was taking it easy in the tail gun turret, thinking pretty soon we'd be flying across the Channel for home, once we got our bearings.

"Suddenly the intercom cracked out. It was the bombardier yelling something about being 'over a Nazi airdrome.'

"Sure enough, we were. I took a look down and could see swastikas on the planes below. Flak started puffing up and the skipper booted our nose toward the ceiling. We could see some of the Focke-Wulfs taking off and knew we weren't going to get home so soon as we'd hoped.

Pour It Into Them

"The skipper yelled through the intercoms: 'There they come, the dirty —— ——. Pour it into them, gang.'

"I thought to myself—let 'em come. Up to then we had been doing all right, raiding as far north as Wilhelmshaven. We had four probables that trip, but I wasn't satisfied. I wanted a chance to make certain of a couple of those Jerries. And here it was coming, coming up fast in those Focke-Wulfs."

Sergeant Kicklighter saw one German fighter streak past his tail position. The Fortress veered about to get outside the wild melange of gun-blazing enemy ships. The maneuver succeeded and for one life-long instant Sergeant Kicklighter held one of the Germans in his sights as the fighter came roaring in, "almost shaving me with a stream of bullets," he said.

In that instant the young flying sergeant's trigger finger held steady. His eyes strained with intensity through the sights.

Fell Off to Right

"I wasn't going to let him get away," he went on. "I gave him a burst that would have followed him to Berlin. I could see the tracers smoking into him as he swept by. He fell off to the right, as he went past and I swung the gun to let him have it going as well. He started dropping and smoke and flame came pouring out of him."

In meantime three of the attackers came charging in through the flak blossoming in the sky. As Kicklighter brought his gun around to meet the rush of a second Focke-Wulf, the waist, top turret gunner and radio operator knocked off these three. But not before they had made a shambles of instrument panels and radio gear. The radio operator was hit in the face by a burst and died at his gun. He had gone back to help in the fight when his equipment was smashed.

"Suddenly it seemed as if a giant foot had kicked a hole in my turret and stepped down on it. A shell had exploded inside the turret. My right leg seemed to be on fire and when I tried to brace myself against a sudden drop in altitude, it was like standing on a sponge.

"I knew I was hurt, all right, but that dive of ours was followed by this last Jerry. I could hardly see because my eyes were burning and closing from ammunition fumes, but I forced them open, trying to get a bead on that crazy highbinder out there who, for some reason, was concentrating on my turret.

"He came in again. I saw him hazily in the sights and then let him have what was left. He seemed to break up all of a sudden, although I couldn't see any too good. The boys said I got him, anyway."

Then, the running fight over, the men in the bullet-and-flak-battered Fortress saw what they were looking for—the steel blue glitter of the English Channel.

Sergt. Kicklighter didn't know about this. Ammunition gone, wish fulfilled, he—well——

"I guess I lost too much blood," he said apologetically. "I passed out."

Worried shipmates dragged him out from behind his gun and administered first aid. The cliffs of Dover showed on the horizon. The lost Fortress was romping home, one man dead, three wounded and with its insides ripped and shattered, its tail crumpled and wings riddled.

They took Sergt. Kicklighter's leg away from him in England.

"There wasn't much left of it, anyway," he said.

The English, however, don't let things like this pass. They gave him the best they had in care—and, the Distinguished Flying Cross to go with the Purple Heart.

Ambassador Standley Inspects Stalingrad

Moscow, Aug. 20 (AP).—Admiral William H. Standley, United States Ambassador to Russia, flew to Stalingrad today to inspect the reconstruction of the city six months after Soviet troops crushed the German sixth army there.

War Sidelights

2 High German Generals Die Of 'Illness,' Berlin Radio Reports

London, Aug. 20 (AP).—The Berlin radio tonight reported the deaths of two Nazi generals, Col. Gen. Hans Jesschonnek, 44-year-old chief of staff of the German air force, and Maj. Gen. Chamier-Glisezenski, whom it identified as "inventor of many German secret weapons."

General Jesschonnek died at the headquarters of Reichsmarshal Hermann Goering as a result of a "serious illness," said the broadcast, recorded by the Associated Press. He was a Hitler protege.

General Chamier-Glisezenski was identified as head of the Peenemuende Research Laboratory, which was bombed heavily by the RAF on August 17.

The broadcast gave no details of Chamier-Glisezenski's death, but London newspapers printed dispatches from Stockholm saying the general was murdered during the RAF attack by a revolver bullet fired from the back.

New Goebbels' Promise

London, Aug. 20 (AP).—Paul Joseph Goebbels, Hitler's propaganda chief, promised the German people today a new secret weapon soon may give them relief from Allied air raids.

"The new weapon against aerial war imposed upon us by the enemy is under construction," he wrote in his weekly article in the propaganda publication Das Reich. "Day and night innumerable busy hands are engaged in its completion."

Finns Cut Axis Radio

Stockholm, Aug. 20 (AP).—The Finnish Information Bureau announced today in Helsinki without explanation that news broadcasts in English beamed to America and Britain would be increased while those in the German, Italian, French and Hungarian languages would be discontinued.

Justice Works in Plant

Olympia, Wash., Aug. 20 (AP).—State Supreme Court Justice William J. Millard has been working in a shipbuilding plant as a carpenter's helper for the past 10 days.

The justice, who is 60, said he would remain on the job until his month's vacation ends in September and might continue thereafter if needed because of the labor shortage.

"It was hard the first week but I've toughened up now so that the eight-hour shift isn't so difficult," he said.

Every Army Branch to Exhibit Its Latest Weapons at 'Back the Attack' Show

tillery, the Finance Department and the branch that holds the ground—Infantry.

Best Show Ever Planned

All these branches and every other service in the Army—including the WAC—is planning to stage the best show each separate service ever put on. Combined, the various displays will make a breath-taking spectacle which, with drills, parades, demonstrations and a multitude of entertainment features will provide a continual thrill for Washington through the weeks of the bond campaign, from September 9 to September 26.

During this period The Washington Post will provide, through a news tent on the exhibition grounds, a constant bulletin service reporting the progress of the war and of the bond campaign throughout the Nation.

Teletype machines will be installed and the news rushed to bulletin boards as it comes from every part of the world.

Among the weapons which will be displayed will be the deadly M-3 submachine-gun, one of the Army's newest and best weapons. It can be purchased for less than the price of a $25 war bond. Here's what your bond will buy:

The new submachine-gun, a refined and modified version of the Tommy-gun, is one of the tools with which Yank doughboys deliver the rabbit punch in the infighting.

To be exhibited and demonstrated at the "Back the Attack" show, one of the most effective and deadly weapons yet devised for hand-to-hand combat, the M-3 submachine-gun, which weighs only 9 pounds, as compared with the 12-pound Thompson submachine-gun, is greatly feared by Axis combat troops. It can be carried in a brief case. Its cost is approximately half that of the Tommy gun.

Already proved in North Africa and Sicily, as well as in action in the South Seas, the M-3, after 49,600 rounds of test firing by the Ordnance Department with a single weapon, proved to be more accurate after prolonged firing than before.

Paratroopers, air-borne Infantry and combat Engineers all are equipped with this development of the Ordnance Department.

Capable of firing .45-caliber slugs at close range at the rate of 450 rounds each minute, its withering power is one of the realistic reasons Axis troops are coming to realize they can't win.

Amphibious troops in landing operations in Sicily have found that rain, salt spray, or even complete immersion in sea water had little effect on the reliability of the sturdy M-3.

WLB Extends Ward Labor Order's Scope

Directs Compliance In Face of Threat Of Disobedience

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

The War Labor Board yesterday extended to three stores of Montgomery Ward & Co. provisions for union maintenance, voluntary checkoff, and compulsory arbitration previously ordered in two Chicago divisions of the company in the fact of public statements by the company that it would disobey the order if issued.

Sewell Avery, head of Montgomery Ward, refused to accept the previous order issued last fall until President Roosevelt had repeatedly requested him to do so. Avery is also in defiance of WLB as chairman of the board of the U. S. Gypsum Co. in a similar case.

Antistrike Act Challenged

The board disclosed that Ward's attorneys had asserted that the Connally-Smith Antistrike Act was unconstitutional and that the War Labor Board which was given legal standing by the statute was acting illegally under the new law.

Public Member Wayne L. Morse, dean of the University of Oregon Law School, answered that contention in a formal opinion as follows:

"The National War Labor Board has accepted and will continue to accept the War Labor Disputes Act as constitutional and valid until and unless the act is held to be unconstitutional by the courts."

Organized labor also had challenged the law as unconstitutional, but this was the first objection raised to it by a major employer.

Attitude Rapped

Morse sharply rapped the company in his opinion for following a "take it or leave it" attitude in collective bargaining.

Morse replied to the company's charge that it was not afforded a fair hearing by saying, "the company's unsupported allegations on these points are dismissed by the board as being frivolous and without merit when considered from the standpoint of the facts as shown in the record."

About 800 workers, represented by the United Mail Order, Warehouse & Retail Employes Union, CIO, working at the company's stores in Denver, New York City, and Detroit, are affected.

Letter From Africa

Chief Porter Believes Son Killed in War

Hourly rereading of a letter from the African theater offering sympathy for his son's "accident" has led District Fire Chief Stephen T. Porter to believe, without question, that the 23-year-old Army pilot gave his life in the Sicilian push.

LIEUT. PORTER

The youth, First Lieut. Robert Porter, who was with a transport command based in Cairo, Egypt, had been in Africa since last November, and, until a few weeks ago, letters came regularly from the front.

On Thursday, Mr. and Mrs. Porter finally received news of their youngest son—condolences from his squadron commander, Capt. E. L. Hibner, who stated simply the "accident was a great blow, and we are with you in your bereavement." No further information, or even confirmation, could be obtained from the War Department.

"We've given him up as lost," Chief Porter commented yesterday.

"We're not fooling ourselves because these are cold facts," he added.

Bob, who was 23 last November, was born here. His name appeared often on local sports pages as he played center on Western High School's championship basketball team and specialized in basketball and track at the University of Maryland. He left the U. of M. in the spring of 1942 to join the Army Air Forces and received his wings the following July.

His family resides at 4320 46th st. nw. A brother, Leonard, is in the Fire Department with his father, while his oldest brother, Stephen, is employed by the Riggs Bank. A sister, Claire, who is employed by the National Radio Institute, is out of town and has not yet been told of the message to the family.

This was the letter which Mr. and Mrs. Porter received from Captain Hibner:

"Words are so dead when one needs them most and right now mine are not doing me justice in the least. As a friend and fellow flier of Bob, I wish to offer my heartfelt sympathy to you both and your family.

"Bob was one swell fellow, and everyone thought very highly of him here. His sincerity and jolliness were an inspiration to all who knew him. His accident was a great blow, and we are with you in your bereavement. Bob was a great pilot and soldier and was a credit to us and the Army. He was a peace-loving fellow, but devoted to duty and was loved and admired by all.

"Having known Bob and his achievements is an inspiration to me and the gang, and we will carry on and do the job as he would want us to."

Yanks Avenge Lost Buddies, Veteran Says

"The front-line boys are fighting this war as a personal issue—they're gunning to pay off the debts of the buddies they've lost in action."

SERGT. MACK

That's the explanation of Staff Sergt. Johnny Mack, 24, who returned here yesterday wearing the Purple Heart after flying jaunts to Alaska, England and Africa, for America's hard-hitting servicemen.

A radio gunner on a medium bomber, Mack himself aims his shots—he won't say how many or how accurately—with a vengeance for one of his best friends who died in the tragic Dunquerque action.

"When I heard about that, I swore I'd even up the score, and that's what I've been doing. And the score won't be even till we've won the war."

Which is one reason why Mack, a former employe in The Post editorial department, regretted his transfer to the States just as the Sicilian push was gathering momentum. He's impatiently looking forward to completion of the refresher courses, to which he's been assigned for the next six months, so he can return to overseas duty.

Mack, whose home is at 2301 41st st. nw., had first hoped to see the big show as a newspaper correspondent, but he's well satisfied to sound off on the fight with a gun.

Three Small Boys Blamed in Wreck Of Train in Mich.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Aug 20 (AP). The curiosity of three small boys, two of them 5 years old and one 6, was blamed today for the derailment here yesterday of the New York Central's Wolverine passenger train and the death of its fireman, John R. McCarty, 56, of Jackson, Mich.

Police Inspector Albert F. Scheiern said he was convinced the wreck was caused by stones the boys told him they placed on the tracks "to see what would happen."

Scheiern released the boys to their parents. He said they waited for the train to pass but got tired and had gone home when derailment occurred. Police said there would be no action against them.

The locomotive and four of six cars of the train jumped the tracks at the city's outskirts. The cars did not overturn.

Wavering PAW

The gasoline rationing muddle has reached a point where less talk and more action is clearly in order. Last week Petroleum Administrator Ickes announced that a "long-range, carefully planned and diligently prosecuted program" had overcome the lack of transportation which formerly necessitated far more stringent rationing of motor fuel in the Eastern States than in the rest of the Nation. "There is, therefore," he said "no reason why the East should not be placed on a parity with the rest of the country." The value of ration coupons in the Midwest and Southwest was cut from four to three gallons a week to make this equalization possible.

Now, however, Acting Petroleum Administrator Davies is bleating about a small overdraft on gasoline stocks in the East. "If this trend continues," he says, "it will obviously delay the time that more liberal supplies of gasoline can be made available for civilian use." That statement seems to come very close to welching on the promise of his chief that the output of gasoline remaining after military demands will be equalized throughout the Nation. It comes, moreover, at the moment when the big new pipeline supplying the East is just getting into operation. In the circumstances it looks very much as if Mr. Davies were trying to give the public a case of rationing jitters.

Undoubtedly the increased consumption of gasoline during the last week reflects in part a breakdown of the pleasure-driving ban. We are surprised that this breakdown did not come sooner. The ban was never effectively enforced and now that the public has Mr. Ickes' promise that the available supply of gasoline will be evened out, motorists apparently feel less restraint than heretofore about violating it. That is one reason why we believe that the OPA should have abandoned the pleasure-driving restriction at the time Mr. Ickes' pledge was made. If the supply of gasoline is to be equalized, the East will certainly have enough to give A-card holders a gallon and a half a week without any strings tied to it.

Instead of trying to intimidate the public into obeying a doomed regulation, Mr. Davies could more usefully employ his energy in seeing that the East gets the gasoline essential to equalize coupon values. It is the job of the OPA to divide up the supply of gas once it is here. We think that the OPA will be entirely in the clear if it accepts the Petroleum Administrator's announced policy at its face value and lifts the pleasure driving ban on September 1, without regard for Mr. Davies' wavering comments in the meantime.

Not Bad For Lewis

The Government's request that the coal miners be put on a 48-hour week softens the blow administered to the unions by the executive order designed to enforce WLB directives. Indeed, it indicates that things are going very well for John L. Lewis' miners. Since the basic work week under contracts between operators and miners is only 35 hours per week, the miners secured increases in pay (at time and a half rates) by the introduction of the 42-hour week last winter. The six hours to be added (likewise paid for at time and a half rates) will mean further substantial additions to earnings, amounting to $9 weekly.

In the circumstances it seems likely that the dispute over wage increases is as good as settled. And from the viewpoint of the WLB, it is a face-saving settlement since it does no violence to the "Little Steel" formula. Peace will be bought at a price, however, that will be paid by the consumer in the form of larger outlays for coal.

The practice of paying penalty rates for overtime work has already cost us dearly in this war. First, it delayed the introduction of the longer working week in many industries after the drain on manpower made it imperative to speed up production by such means. Secondly, by increasing per unit labor costs, the time-and-a-half overtime pay system has increased the cost of the war, and added to the outpouring of Federal funds, thus directly and indirectly exerting an inflationary pressure on prices. By whatever name we call increases in wage rates that are not paralleled by correspondingly large additions to output, the result is the same: higher prices and renewed demands from wage-earners for still more wage increases.

Since OWM Director Byrnes states that the country is threatened by a coal shortage, the lengthening of the working week in the coal mines must be accepted as an unavoidable emergency measure. But while recognizing the existence of an emergency, it should not be forgotten that the Government is following wage policies that conflict with its own stabilization program. In the present instance those policies will almost certainly give rise to serious postwar difficulties when the coal mines are confronted by the competition of rival fuels.

Family Life

The New York newspapers recently published the story of a lady who was eager to join the WACS, but who was told that she must first disencumber herself of dependents. Accordingly, she appealed to the courts for permission to "make the sacrifice" of surrendering the custody of her 6-year-old son to a divorced husband. The permission was duly granted.

While we know nothing else about the circumstances of this particular case, it is certainly true that a very large number of American women have been perhaps a bit too eager to sacrifice the interests of their children to what they doubtless consider the higher interests of patriotism. Is it not about time that women began to ask in which direction true patriotism lies when it comes to a choice between the home and the barracks or the home and the workbench? In every large city of the country the number of war disrupted homes and the number of unmanaged and unmanageable children is multiplying monthly. This has become probably the most serious of all our internal problems. After making all possible allowance for such real and serious factors as housing congestion, inadequacies of organized recreation, and the general excitements and tensions of the times, there is no doubt that the principal factor in the rise of juvenile and adolescent crime and violence has been the rapid deterioration of family influences and restraints.

In a good many cases women have been forced to leave their homes and enter factories out of the necessity of supplementing the family income to meet rising living costs. In other cases women have had to take over completely the role of family breadwinner, replacing an enlisted or drafted husband. In a good many cases, however, it seems to have been merely the notion, foolishly emphasized in much of our domestic propaganda, that filling shell casings or welding jeeps is somehow a much nobler occupation for a modern mother than rearing her children.

Inevitably children who are left to their own devises for days and months develop a set of ethical norms which differ very markedly from the traditional ethics of the family. Just as it provides a certain moral focus for the derelict mother, the war provides a certain moral focus for the derelict child—as, for example, in the case of the young girls who tell themselves they are serving the cause of country by promiscuous associations with soldiers and sailors.

But it is difficult to say what will happen when peace comes and this focus is removed. Recently at a gathering of police chiefs in Detroit, Col. Homer Garrison of Austin, Tex., told his colleagues that when the war is over they may expect a crime wave "far bloodier and costlier than that of the Capone-Dillinger era." It will be one, he said, that will have revolutionary and racial overtones. Colonel Garrison's estimate of the situation, we find, is identical with that of almost every other thoughtful police official.

All this would seem to indicate that we cannot wait for the war to end before beginning the work of internal reconstruction and that one of the things most grievously and urgently in need of reconstruction is family life in America. This will not be easy. We are aware that even before the war family life among a considerable section of the population was being threatened by various influences. But though family life is difficult when both parents are for long periods unemployed, it is all but impossible when both parents are for long periods absent. This is something that from now on should be taken into consideration in all decisions affecting manpower and selective service.

Treaty Making

Everyone who is concerned over the obsolescence of our peace-making machinery will be gratified to learn that the Department of State and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee have worked amiably together on revision of the United Nations relief and rahabilitation convention. A month ago Secretary Hull and some members of the committee seemed to be at odds as to the procedure that should be followed. Fear of another impasse between the Department of State and the Senate arose. But the department has since taken cognizance of suggestions made by the Senators. It is now working out a final draft of the revised convention with the benefit of advice from the Senate, or, at least that segment of the Senate which is specially concerned with the problem.

Here is a hopeful illustration of procedure that ought to be routine. As a result of this meeting of minds, it is believed that the revised convention can be put into effect by a simple majority vote in the Senate and House. Congress will merely be asked to appropriate funds to comply with its terms. Apparently the question of ratifying a treaty by a two-thirds vote will not arise.

This expedient has proved useful in the past and it may do so many times in the future in giving effect to agreements that do not necessarily fall into the category of treaties. We do not believe, however, that it obviates the necessity of abolishing the two-thirds vote in the Senate for the approval of treaties. The line between treaties and executive agreements or temporary conventions may be very thin, but that line cannot be removed by simply dropping the word "treaty" from our official vocabulary and calling every binding arrangement with a foreign power an "agreement." The constitutional provision which permits 33 out of 96 Senators to block a treaty will never cease to be a drag upon responsible government until it has been openly and honestly eliminated.

So the most hopeful aspect of the agreement on the relief and rehabilitation convention is the fact that the State Department and the Senate leaders in foreign affairs have worked out an American policy in collaboration. That is what the founding fathers contemplated. It is the only method, in these days of complex international dealings, by which the checks and balances of the American governmental system can be made workable. What appears to be a chance get-together of executive and legislative officials ought to be a routine means of bringing about a meeting of minds on foreign policy.

We suggest also that the same sort of teamwork be used to initiate amendment of the two-thirds rule. With the active support of the Administration and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee we believe that this defect in our constitutional system could be readily eliminated. There has never been such a favorable time as the present moment to press the attack. Popular support for abolition of the two-thirds rule would, in our opinion, be overwhelming. Officials who are directing our foreign policy will make a grave error if they let this favorable opportunity to effect a basic reform pass with merely an expedient juggling of words.

Is Austria Hitler's?

Three decisions of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals affecting Austrians in this country serve as a reminder that the attitude of the State Department toward Austria is still in a state of confusion. In one case the court held that an Austrian alleged to be an enemy alien may be considered a "native," but not a "citizen," of Germany if the Department of State has recognized the absorption of Austria into the Third Reich. That seems to put the department on the spot in this matter. Apparently it will have to make up its mind whether or not the American Government has tacitly accepted the results of Hitler's first conquest outside the borders of Germany.

Clarification of Austria's status is important, however, for reasons more far-reaching than the fate of a few Austrians in this country suspected of working with our enemies. Allied armies will soon be smashing their way into the mainland of Europe. The cost of that invasion in terms of casualties will depend in no small measure upon the cooperation of the peoples of Europe's conquered lands in striking at the common foe. Sound military policy as well as prudent diplomacy suggests, therefore, that we lose no time in making clear to the Austrians that they, too, are among the peoples we intend to liberate. We see no possibility that the United Nations will permit Germany to retain the first fruits of Hitler's conquest. Surely, then, the Austrians ought to be given every encouragement to join in the struggle for redemption of their country at the opportune moment.

Unfortunately, the Austrian groups in this country have not yet been able to achieve a unity of aim and action in presenting their problem to the United Nations. Their internal dissension makes it the harder for the Department of State to clarify its own policy. But at least it could take the initiative, in cooperation with our allies, in making clear that the principles of the Atlantic Charter apply to Austria as well as to other conquered lands. Such assurances at this time would probably have an electrifying effect upon the Austrian factions in this country as well as upon the millions now under Hitler's control in that unhappy land.

BIRTHPLACE

The maple lane has withered now to red;
The yellow beechnut tree still stands alone
And bends an arm above the street—a crone
Aimlessly beckoning the whispering dead.

The garden wall, beneath each memory tread
Is crumbling now, stone upon ashen stone
Laid to give permanence to flesh and bone.

The rose that in still afternoons once shed
Its petals on the lawn lies dry and blown.

The lettered gate, too feeble to maintain Tradition, drops to the name where leaves have rolled
And groans above it as the clouds sow rain
And earth reaps all into her own slow mold.

The house, in weedy pride, with rustling newt
Lives on unmindful of the sign of doom.

And as I step across the sill the lute
That was your voice drifts past me, mute,
And echoes till I stand, within the gloom,
Beside blue asters in a sunny room.

Paraguay's Place

PARAGUAY, WHICH this week has inaugurated President Higenio Morinigo for his first full term of office, is the smallest South American country in population, though not in size. Each Latin-American country, however small, has an importance due to position in the hemisphere. The very small Central American and Caribbean states have strategic positions in this age of the airplane because they surround the Panama Canal. Paraguay's place in the picture is that of buffer state between the South American giants, Brazil and Argentina.

Paraguay is of interest today because recent developments there show that new and important trends in Latin America are reaching even into this small and remote continental country. It also has a distinction that may bring it into the limelight after the war when the United Nations start in trying to find solutions for some of Europe's chronic problems, especially that of overpopulation. Paraguay is one of the few countries in the world that has encouraged immigration in recent years and really wants people to come in.

Background On Paraguay

Background on Paraguay has to start with the fact that, although its size and position obviously cast it for the role of submissive buffer state, it has never acted like one. On the contrary, it has one of the most extraordinary military histories of any country.

As our Civil War was ending, Paraguay, then flourishing and progressive, warned Brazil to keep her fingers out of little Uruguay's pie. War resulted. Pro-Brazilian forces got control in Uruguay and both countries fought Paraguay.

Paraguay asked Argentina, supposed to be Brazil's rival in Uruguay, to let her armies go through Argentine territory to get at her enemies. Argentina refused and combined with the other two. Paraguay, about the size of California, was now at war with two-thirds of South America.

Paraguay fought these three countries on her own soil for six years. The capital was taken and Paraguay's armies were slowly pushed back through three-fourths of the inhabited part of the country. The war ended only when their leader, the amazing General Lopez, was killed in 1870 leading a last-stand fight by an army reduced to a few hundred.

Half of the population of Paraguay was killed in this war and the country was laid waste.

Recovery was slow. Paraguay was still undeveloped and apparently weak when trouble started with Bolivia, three times its size, over a strip of Chaco jungle where there was supposed to be oil. When war broke out in 1932 the Paraguayans put up a stiff fight, at the cost of heavy casualties and exhaustion of their resources. The big countries, Argentina, Brazil, Chile made futile gestures to stop the war for several years. The American republics finally secured a truce in 1935. After an American oil geologist convinced the proper people that there is no oil under the Gran Chaco, the trouble was arbitrated and settled.

Army Dictatorship

Paraguay has nearly always been run by army dictatorship working hand in glove with landowners. After the Chaco War a progressive-minded army group held brief control, but conservatism was too strong for them. In 1939 Gen. Jose Estigarribia, Chaco hero and former Minister to the United States, became president. He first clamped down on the opposition, then mapped a program of public works and aid to agriculture. He broke up the enormous estates, whose owners had lived for years in Buenos Aires and even in Europe.

General Estigarribia was killed in an air accident in 1940 and General Morinigo chosen to fill out his term. He has continued his policies.

Paraguay is fertile, but undeveloped. There are great stretches of rich land still uncleared. The country lacks even the first necessity for development, adequate internal communications. A poor nation, they have been faced with the impossible task of lifting themselves by nonexistent financial bootstraps.

The second World War is bringing Paraguay the answer to her problem, as it is to so many Latin-American countries. Our cooperative policies, speeded up on the eve of war, enabled them to borrow three million dollars from the Export-Import Bank. With this money roads are being built from the centers of population along the Paraguay River into the rich east central region. Brazil is planning to back a railroad into this section after the war.

As agreed at Rio, we are today helping Paraguay fight her high disease and death rate. We are also helping them develop greater food supplies for their undernourished people and new noncompetitive exports. With this initial push, agricultural Paraguay hopes to get going under her own steam and do what it can in meeting the world food problem that all nations must face in postwar reconstruction.

The Time Element

A Lesson From Italy

BY NOW THERE must be millions of Germans, perhaps the great majority, who realize that the Third Reich has irrevocably lost the war.

They have seen the once all-conquering Wehrmacht driven back from the Volga and the Don, out of Egypt, Libya, Tunisia and Sicily. They know that Allied bombs have made a shambles out of some of their principal cities, such as Hamburg, Essen, Duesseldorf and Cologne.

They realize that no point in Germany is now safe and that the Luftwaffe, for all of Goering's threats and Goebbels' imprecations can neither defend nor revenge them.

The Germans, a very large number of them, anyway, are also aware that the U-boat campaign, from which so much was expected, has failed. They are aware of the fact that Italy, for all intents and purposes, is out of the war and that if any part of that kingdom continues to be defended it will have to be defended by Germans.

Nor are they unmindful of the circumstance that Germany's other allies are frantically exploring every possible avenue of escape.

YET WE MUST not assume from all this that Germany is at the end of her rope, that she will soon collapse.

This may happen, of course, for anything can happen in a situation as explosive as that which exists on the continent of Europe. But it is unlikely to happen. For proof there is the lesson we can draw from Italy.

Italy suffered her first major defeat in this war at the close of 1940 when General (now Field Marshal) Wavell and his tiny Army of the Nile routed an Italian force many times its size in the first desert campaign.

Since then, Italy's experience has been one of practically unbroken disaster. Even when the Italians were temporarily on the winning side, as at the time of Rommel's march on Alexandria, it was not the Italians but the Germans who took and received the credit. And since last October the war has drawn steadily closer to the Italian mainland until today the entire peninsula lies exposed and helpless.

Yet despite the long succession of defeats and despite the fact that the Italian people never had any stomach for this war and would like nothing better than to be out of it, Italy is still in the war.

ITALY IS STILL in the war because the Italian people who want peace are dominated by a regime which cannot get it for them. For that regime is itself subject to orders from Berlin, and it is to Germany's interests to keep Italy actively or even nominally a belligerent.

It is true the revolutionary ferment in Italy has steadily increased since the overthrow of Mussolini on July 25. But Mussolini's overthrow, be it remembered, was the result, in the first instance, of a palace revolution and not of any revolt of the masses.

To be sure, the sorry game which Marshal Badoglio and King Victor Emmanuel are playing is nearing its end. The fact remains that even with Allied troops in occupation of Palermo and other Italian cities on the island of Sicily, and even with Milan, Turin, Genoa and other Italian cities subjected to Allied air raids of increasing frequency and mounting destructiveness, the Badoglio regime was able, long after Mussolini fell, to resist popular demands for peace.

NOW IF THAT has been true of a regime as feeble as that headed by the Duke of Addis Ababa it is infinitely more true of the government which dominates the Reich, a government which is capable of employing every form of savagery and brutality to remain in power.

It is for this reason that we cannot afford to assume that the situation today is exactly parallel to that which obtained in 1918.

In many respects, of course, the present situation does resemble that of the closing months of the First World War. But whereas, in 1918, there were legal avenues through which German opposition to the war could be made manifest, notably the Reichstag and the press, there are none today.

In other words, there are no points of polarity around which German peace sentiment can today crystallize. The regime can continue to function for a long time despite the growing bitterness of the individual Germans, the evident hopelessness of German military efforts and the certainty of ultimate defeat for the Reich.

PROBABLY, by the same token, when the German collapse comes it will come all of a heap. All elements of the war effort may disintegrate at once. But in the meantime Nazi control will remain relatively unchallenged.

But neither the Nazi leaders nor the army chiefs are ignorant of the trend of events. So we have every reason to expect that side by side with military resistance to the Allies and repression of anti-Hitler and anti-war manifestations in the Reich, the Nazis will make a real effort, at this time, to secure a negotiated peace.

The first moves in that direction have already been made. Despite Casablanca and the certainty that, in one way or another, the Casablanca formula of unconditional surrender will be reasserted at Quebec, these efforts will continue. Against them we must remain eternally on our guard.

Bovingdon Case

Your editorial in re the dismissal of Mr. Bovingdon is renewed assurance we still are living in the land of free speech. The appalling dismissal of said Bovingdon without hearing following the vaporings of the "gentleman from Texas" should bring us up short as to what goes on. Just from whence stems the power of Mr. Dies. Talk about dictators! If I read the public prints correctly, I believe we have armies in all points of the world fighting dictators, or am I in error on this point? Upon what meat doth this my Caesar feed?

RUSSELL T. EDWARDS.
Chevy Chase, Md., Aug. 6.

The dismissal from office of Mr. Bovingdon because at one time he engaged in a dance which effected a physical cure from an ailment with which he was afflicted seems to me like an official crucifixion.

Few men in America have had more extensive academic training than he—his wide travels and many works in the field of educaiton in both Asia and America—his specialized studies in economics certainly qualify him for the post from which he was dismissed.

Most men dance at some time in their lives and jitterbugging today is by no means confined to college students.

I have seen college professors, otherwise quite sedate, attempt the jitterbug and they are still holding their jobs.

Shortly after Theodore Roosevelt became President he led a cake-walk in the East Room of the White House and no impeachment proceedings were filed in the House of Representatives.

THOS. H. R. CLARKE.
Washington, Aug. 9.

I am of the opinion that you have lost your sense of perspective in evaluating the news events of the day. I refer to the Bovingdon case about which, to date, three editorials have been devoted.

In one editorial you charge Mr. Crowley with having "weakly and capriciously" dismissed this character from the service. I wish to vigorously protest such a statement.

In the first place, Bovingdon invited dismissal by airing his correspondence with the press prior to, or, at least, simultaneously with the receipt of his views by Mr. Crowley. Furthermore, the contents of that correspondence proved that Mr. Crowley had taken time out from his multiple duties to interview Bovingdon about his case.

In the second place, the importance of OEW in the war scheme is too great to permit one individual to attract national ridicule of that organization as a result of an expose of information which Bovingdon undoubtedly suppressed in the first instance. And Bovingdon proudly admitted these facts prior to his interview with Mr. Crowley! If any one was guilty of being "weak" and "capricious," was it not Bovingdon?

ROBERT CAMERON.
Washington, Aug. 7.

I wish to take this opportunity to commend you on your courageous and forthright policy in connection with the Bovingdon-Crowley affair and with the investigation by the Cox Committee of the Federal Communications Commission.

In my opinion, your editorial treatment of these two issues has been exemplary and has certainly been a model for all newspapers to follow. I feel that The Post has been keeping clear from the sensationalism, half-truths and bias that have characterized so many of our newspapers, and by its inspiring and honest editorials has attracted to it readers of the highest intellectual caliber.

I hope that you may continue in effect those policies which have justly earned you the position of being among the highest ranking newspapers in the country.

JOSEPH W. SACHS.
Washington, Aug. 13.

As a subscriber to The Post for a score and more of years I deplore and condemn the unfair methods employed by it toward the Dies Committee and what unjustly it considers its unprotected victims.

The committee needs no defense against its detractors within and without Congress. At every session during the last few years it has been sustained by large majorities and continued as an investigating committee despite the splenetic protests of Reds, Fascists and other foes of our form of government.

You fail also to note that your covert attacks upon the committee really are an attack on the popular branch of Congress, which controls the committee. Also, I might add, on the great majority of Americans, who again and again have returned the pro-Dies members to power.

SAMUEL SALOMAN.
Washington, Aug. 10.

Small, smug, narrow-minded people everywhere will agree with Mr. Dies that gymnastic dancers are not needed in the war effort. But our Revolutionary ancestors gave their lives to protect the rights of Dr. Bovingdon. His gymnastic dancing harms no one—and hundreds of citizens agree it is beneficial. The small, smug minds merely want to keep the country down to their level. Not being intellectual themselves, they cannot conceive that the honest interest of an intellectual mind in other nations and other cults is the stuff real progress is made of. Any differences of opinion with them is, ipso facto, subversive.

FRANCIS HOLWAY.
Alexandria, Va., Aug. 6.

I have watched the development of The Post as the only Washington newspaper with a decent, honest policy. Your handling of the Bovingdon case is "on the beam." You are doing a job for democracy. Congratulations!

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

The Postwar World

Elmer Twitchell was bored. Life was becoming far too comfortable. It was a hot day, so he pressed a button and—presto!—the air-conditioning unit cooled off the home immediately. (Somehow it reminded him that autumn was not far away, and he had better phone the chemist for a bottle of that new fuel that would heat a ten-room house all winter.)

Presently he was jolted out of his plastic armchair. A second lurch threw him back into it.

"Hey! What's going on?" he yelled.

"Oh, I thought you knew!" explained the wife. "The new home is being delivered. They're taking away the old one."

Elmer knew they had traded in the house for a new model, but had forgotten the delivery day. He got out of the building and watched them haul it to the used-home market.

"Like it?" asked Mrs. Twitchell as they entered the new house.

"It looks good, but I suppose I'll have to master a lot of new controls," sighed Elmer.

Mrs. Twitchell explained that there were only a dozen new ones, including a switch that made person-to-person phone calls without any help from central, and a button that raised and lowered windows.

Elmer was puzzled by a roofless wing to the north of the new dwelling. Mrs. Twitchell explained this was where the helicopter was kept.

"Where do we put our auto?" he asked.

"The new model folds up. We can put it behind the piano," she said.

Elmer expressed a desire to inspect the helicopter, but the wife explained that the children were out in it.

"Will they be gone long?"

"Only about a half hour. They're only going about 600 miles, dear."

"I don't like the idea of my kids kiting around the skies," said Elmer. "They might get hurt."

"You're so old-fashioned," sighed Mrs. Twitchell.

It was lunch time. "What're we going to have?" asked Elmer. "I don't know," replied Mrs. Twitchell. "Just throw that green switch and see."

Elmer threw the switch. The east wall folded, revealing the Fireside Automateria, with hot and cold dishes prepared and presented by electronics or something.

There was a sharp siren from without. It was the Mookeys leaving for Africa over the weekend in their combination trailer-plane.

* * *

"What's new over in Europe?" he asked after a while. "I hear there's been some riots in Vienna."

"Let's tune in on the television set and see 'em," said Mrs. Twitchell.

That evening they went to the opera. The one in Milan, of course. Television again. After it was over Elmer felt hungry.

"Let's go to that place in London," suggested the wife, fiddling with the television set. Know what they're featuring

"What?"

"A plastic hamburger sandwich," said Mrs. Twitchell.

Elmer collapsed with a groan. There's a limit to everything.

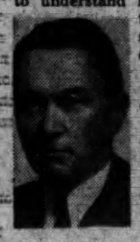
Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Toward an Economic Foreign Policy:

III. The Turning Point

IF WE are to achieve peace and a stable prosperity after this war, we shall have to learn to understand how different is the economic position in this century from what it was in the nineteenth century.



LIPPMANN

This is not easy. It is not even easy to realize what in fact an economic foreign policy is, and how you go about forming one.

It is perhaps only fair to warn the reader that this subject is dull even though it is vitally important.

THERE IS an obvious reason why economic foreign policy is more or less a closed book to Americans of our generation. It is that for 50 years—from about 1870 to 1920—this country was in the unique position of not needing to think about economic foreign policy.

For it was in the early 1870's that there came to an end American dependence upon the imports of foreign manufacture and upon foreign capital to finance the imports. During the first 80 years of our national existence our net indebtedness to foreign countries rose from nine million dollars in 1795 to 1500 million dollars in 1869. On the average during this period the money we received for our exports was only from 80 to 85 per cent of the money we had to pay out for our imports. Before the Civil War the difference was covered by our borrowing money in Europe, and beginning in the 1850's in part by gold mined in California.

But by the middle 1870's, as Miss Cleona Lewis shows us in her study for the Brookings Institution, our foreign accounts had come into balance except by what we owed on the earlier debts. The income from our exports and from the services which we performed for foreigners were more than sufficient to pay for our imports, for the expenditures of American tourists, and for the remittances of immigrants to their relatives in Europe. But we still did not have enough income from abroad to pay the interest and the dividends owed to foreigners. So from 1874 to 1897 we continued to borrow abroad, and during this period our net foreign indebtedness, not counting the defaults and repudiations on State and railway debts, increased by some one billion 300 million dollars net. This raised our net indebtedness to two billion 710 million dollars.

FROM 1898 to 1914—that is to say from the Spanish War to the first World War—the position which we had held throughout our previous history began to change radically. Though we continued to borrow, we began to invest abroad. Between 1897 and 1914 our foreign investments multiplied five times. Our foreign borrowing doubled. As a result, by the year 1908 we turned the corner, and our net liabilities in 1914, when war broke out, were slightly less than they were in 1908. This is important. For it shows that we were destined, even without the effects of war, to cease to be a debtor nation.

But the war which began in 1914 made sudden and dramatic this change, which would otherwise have been slow and gradual. At the outset of the first World War we were net debtors to the amount of some three billion 700 million dollars. Five years later we had not only paid off all this debt, but had become, if we include the war debts, net creditors to the amount of 12 billion 562 million dollars. If we exclude the war debts, we were still creditors to the amount of some three billion dollars.

THIS LONG and, I suppose, rather dry history, is very important to us. For it shows that until 1870 we had to think about economic foreign relations because we were dependent upon foreign lending. It shows that after 1870 and until the first World War we really did not have to think seriously about economic foreign relations because we had only to borrow relatively small sums to service what had become, in relation to our growing wealth, a rather small foreign debt.

NOW VIRTUALLY all the adults who voted and all the men who held public office in the '20s were educated before 1914—in a period when we had no need to think seriously about economic foreign relations. Even today, 30 years later, the most influential leaders of opinion in both parties in Congress, in the Administration, in the farm bloc, in organized labor, in corporate business and in journalism are men who grew up in the days when the country did not need an economic foreign policy.

We can understand, therefore, why this country was caught unprepared in 1920, and is still unprepared to readjust our economic policy to the momentous fact that we have ceased to be a debtor and have become a great creditor Nation.

War Loan GroupNamed

Reilly Picks Aides

Washington's organization for the 15 billion dollar third war loan campaign to start September 9 was completed yesterday with the appointment by John A. Reilly, chairman, of an executive committee to direct the drive and to meet with Treasury officials to set a quota for the District.

Appointed as chief aids to Reilly are Robert V. Fleming, president of the Riggs National Bank; J. Clifford Folger of the investment firm of Folger, Nolan & Co.; Winslow B. Van Devanter, vice president of Lionel D. Edie & Co.; H. L. Rust, jr., president of the H. L. Rust Co., who was chairman of the District of Columbia War Savings Committee.

Support of labor was assured with the appointment of Frank W. Lee yesterday. Lee will be chairman of the labor division of the campaign committee. He is a member of the International Association of Machinists, chairman of the board of trustees of the Central Labor Union and vice president of the City Bank of Washington. In accepting the appointment yesterday, Lee said:

Support of Labor Promised

"Labor will support the Third War Loan to the fullest extent as it has the previous war loan campaigns. International and local labor unions are constantly buying bonds, not waiting until a special effort is made by the Government in a particular drive."

The campaign this time will endeavor to bring home to citizens the value of purchasing $100 bonds rather than two or more smaller bonds. Reason for the suggestion is that much less paper work will have to be done by the selling agents and the Treasury.

During the first war loan drive the District raised more than 55 million dollars and during the second the total exceeded 78 millions.

Washington will be treated to a cavalcade of motion-picture stars the night before the drive starts, September 8, when Hollywood will be represented by actors who will leave from here to visit various cities in the interest of the campaign.

The Hollywood aggregation will include Judy Garland, Mickey Rooney, Greer Carson, Hedy Lamarr, Joan Crawford, Cary Grant, Kay Kyser and his entire band, Dick Powell, Lucille Ball, Fred Astaire, Edward Arnold, Red Skelton, Dorothy Lamour, Walter Pidgeon and others. Bob Hope, who previously had given freely of his time is now in England.

Stars To Assistant Morgenthau

In one of the greatest gatherings of its sort in history, the stars will assist Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau open the greatest financial campaign in history.

The campaign will offer securities to fit every class and type of investor. The Series E bond, commonly known as the people's bond, is for the small investor. No one person may buy more than $5000 worth for which the sale price is $3750. There are the F bonds for larger investors, issued at a discount and commonly known as 12-year appreciation bonds. Series G bonds are issued at par. Then there will be Treasury savings notes of Series C issued at par in one, five, $10,000 and $100,000, $500,000 and one million dollar denominations.

Also will be sold Treasury certificates of indebtedness dated September 15, 1943, due September 1, 1944, paying ⅞ per cent interest. They will be issued in amounts from $1,000 to one million dollars.

No Time Limit

Two per cent Treasury bonds and 26-year 2½ per cent bonds are also to be issued to larger buyers.

No time limit has been set on either the national or District campaign. During the last drive here the District reached 188 per cent of its quota, raising $78,600,000.

The campaign committee has been divided into subcommittees. The committees and their heads who yet are to appoint their full committees are:

Business Division, Edgar Morris, chairman; Publicity Division, James W. S. Hardey, chairman; Construction Division, Charles T. Penn, chairman; Women's Division, Mrs. Howard G. Nichols, chairman, and Speakers' Bureau, William P. MacCracken, chairman.

CHAPTER XVIII

Moscow Dateline

By Henry C. Cassidy

Winter Hindered Reds, Too

It was only about 100 miles from Moscow to the front. I rode for two days and sat up for two nights, trying to cover that distance—and I could not make it. That was my first lesson in the potency of old General Winter. It taught me a lot about why the Germans, fighting both the Red Army and winter, could not cover the same distance from the front to Moscow.

That lesson also taught me that General Winter did not belong to the Red Army. If he did, he should have been shot for treason, because he opposed the Russians just as much as he did the Germans. He was fighting for no one but himself.

HENRY C. CASSIDY

We heard in Moscow, during that first winter of war, a vague idea had gone abroad that winter was all on the Russians' side; that all the Germans' woes were due entirely to the weather, and not at all to the Red Army. It would have been very hard to sell that idea to men who fought the Germans to a standstill before Moscow, and then hunched their way through snow and bitter cold to drive back the enemy. They, too, suffered and died at the hands of General Winter.

Favoring Factors

But two factors did favor the Russians in that first winter campaign. The weather was less severe on the defender than on the attacker, and since the Germans were on the offensive at the crucial point of the campaign, since the great issue was whether they would take or fail to take Moscow, they were at a disadvantage. Then the Russians were fully prepared for winter with their felt boots, padded jackets, fur hats, and winter capes, their skis, sleds and sleighs, while the Germans were completely unprepared—ghastly, almost inconceivable error on the part of so supposedly brilliant a high command.

So victory in the first winter campaign went to the Russians—not decisive or ever very far-reaching victory, because General Winter was still there, fighting only for himself and against the Red Army's counteroffensive, but nevertheless, clear-cut victory.

I had a personal introduction to General Winter on a trip to the front. It was supposed to be General Belov's sector, but before we got there we crossed General Winter, and this time we lost by a complete knockout.

We left the Metropole just before noon December 15 in three big ZIS cars, the Soviet version of a Buick, manufactured in the Stalin plant, Moscow. Just before nightfall we reached Kolomna, a quiet little town which had only recently been an immediate objective of battle and which still hid behind its barricades. There we stopped to find a side road which would take us 30 miles southwest to Kashira. There, also, one of the ZIS cars decided it would go no farther.

While the drivers assembled to discuss these two problems, Palgunov, chief of the Soviet press department, with an unerring nose for nourishment, picked out a dark, shuttered house, knocked, and we were admitted to a restaurant. Inside there was light, warmth, and hospitality. Bowls of steaming soup and platters of hot meat-balls and boiled potatoes were produced. For dessert, Palgunov conjured up out of his baggage a little blue pottery jug of yellow Chartreuse liqueur with which we sweetened the tea.

Ominous Darkness

Outside, after supper, we found a sullen, ominous darkness had fallen, and answers had been found to our two problems. The first was that a country road ran west through the fields and forests, a dirt track at best, but marked by telegraph poles which could be followed. The second was that the passengers from the stalled ZIS would be transferred to the other two cars.

We turned away from the circumspect civilization of Kolomna, the charted course of the Moscow road, into the wild, empty borderland of the Steppes. The car groped its ways deliberately along the track vaguely indented in the snow. Its headlights picked out, one after another, the gray, weather-beaten telegraph poles that stood like beacons amid pools of blackness.

Suddenly the snow came again. Storms have a way of starting in Russia, as though the atmosphere, agonized by its oversaturation, could contain its burden no longer and precipitated the heavy, cloying mass to earth. Our headlight rays were deflected, as though a thick white sheet had been hung immediately in front of them. The path disappeared in the untracked fields.

We pressed on to the next telegraph pole. Beyond that, nothing was visible in the blinding swirls of snow. The driver stopped, went forward on foot to find the direction, probing with his feet for the road under the snow and peering ahead for another pole. With a new bearing, he tried to drive on again.

Abruptly, the car lurched off the road, burying its right side in a ditch and settling up to the hub caps in a soft snow. A grinding sound and a shout from behind told us that the other ZIS had taken the same path.

The drivers made a few half-hearted efforts to churn their way back to the road. They were hopeless.

"Here for the Night"

"Let's face it, chums," said Philip Jordan of the London News Chronicle; "we're here for the night."

Outside, there seemed to be a faint black line of trees in the distance, and before that, only the unbroken sweep of snow. Nowhere were there any signs of human life.

This, I thought, must be how the German motorized infantry felt stalled in troop carriers while trying to reach Moscow. At least, we did not have to worry about personal foes creeping up on us with hand grenades and automatic rifles. We were secure behind the Red army lines. Our only foe was the impersonal General Winter.

He was a very real enemy out there, whining weirdly, striking savagely at any living thing exposed to him on the steppe, making existence seem impossible. The wind, screaming and scratching at the doors and windows, began to penetrate the car. The snow drifted higher and higher. The cold settled closer and closer.

For a while we talked of that, and of people freezing to death, and of wolves roaming these steppes in packs. We swapped jokes, but after a while we reached the point where everyone had heard all that anyone could recall.

We twitched and fidgeted in our cramped quarters, sitting straight upright, and finally dozed fitfully until the pale gray dawn leaked over the horizon. Palgunov trudged through the snow, bringing a box of chocolates and another jug of Chartreuse for breakfast. Soon an army truck came down the road, plowing its way easily through the drifts. The troops leaped out, heaved our cars from the ditch back onto the road, and broke a path for us to the Moscow-Kashira highway. A day late, we reached our first destination—the same kind of tardiness that ruined the schedule of the German offensive.

That second evening we drove out of Kashira toward General Belov's headquarters. This time it was a clear, starlit night. The wind whipped the snow from the road, baring a treacherous coat of ice. We rode 4 miles south, nearly to Piatnitsa, farthest point of the German advance on the left flank of the Moscow defenses. There the road dipped into a steep valley. The cars skidded to the bottom of the decline, started up the other side, and could not reach the top. Several times they backed down and tried again, their tires shrieking on the ice, but each time they failed to get sufficient traction and came to a standstill. There was nothing to do but turn around and return to Kashira. But the hill we had descended was equally impassable. We were stranded for the second night.

"Let's face it, chums," Philip started to say . . .

"Face it, nothing; let's foot it," interrupted another correspondent.

So we decided to walk back to Kashira rather than sit up again in the cars.

The next morning we abandoned our trip and drove ignominiously back to Moscow, covering in a few hours the same distance it had taken us two days to drive on the outward drive. We had not reached the front. But we had learned very intimately, to a lesser degree but to some etxent, what the Germans had been up against, from General Winter alone, in their drive on Moscow. I hated to think what it must have been like with the Red army, as well as the weather, in the opposition.

Monetary Objections

By the Associated Press

Bankers Fear New Plan

New York, Aug. 20.—A number of important monetary experts in New York's financial district said today they doubted the new money-stabilization plan proposed by the United States Treasury yesterday could be made to work under post-war conditions.

The plan, the Treasury's second tentative blueprint for an international money and foreign-trade system after the war, followed similar proposals by both British and Canadian authorities.

Many commercial bankers who would have to deal with an international money authority would rather see some less formal and more flexible approach to the problem of creating an international money mechanism.

Chary as usual of comment on pending proposals in Washington, several nevertheless talked freely on condition they not be identified by name.

"Neither this nor the earlier British and American proposals is likely to get anywhere as long as they call for a supernational authority which can bring strong—perhaps decisive—pressure on the course of prices and business in the United States or other participating countries," one banker said.

"I think the farmers in the United States, particularly, would revolt at the idea of any body which had the actual or potential ability to control their prices and were not subject to their political pressure.

"Furthermore, it might subject the United States to all kinds of international political complications whether or not we had a veto power over the actions of an international authority."

An initial informal arrangement between the Federal Reserve Banks and the Bank of England, with the adherence of British and commercial banks seemed the best way to start an international currency stabilization plan, one banker suggested.

The Gallup Poll

Public Would Prefer Government Influenced Py 'Big Business' Rather Than Labor Unions

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Aug. 20.—One of the issues which will likely be debated at length between now and the 1944 election is how much relative influence big business and labor unions should have with the Government.

Vice President Wallace raised the issue in his recent Detroit speech in which he said that some of the Administration's foes want to go back to the good old days of Americanism "when Washington was only a way station in the suburbs of Wall Street." It is inevitable that equally extreme partisans in the Republican Party will counter with the charge that the New Deal is now being dominated by labor unions.

When the bitter-enders of both parties start the fireworks over this issue of the influence of big business versus labor unions in relation to Government, where will the sympathies of the public lie?

While the average American believes the Government should not be controlled by any one group, nevertheless if he had to choose he would prefer to see business have more control over Government than labor unions.

That is the consensus in a national survey just completed by the Institute. It is a reflection of the fact that in the last few years big business has won far more favor with the public than have the unions. It also suggests that in the postwar era the pendulum of public opinion is likely to swing toward the conservative ideas of businessmen rather than toward the reform ideas of liberals in the labor movement.

The issue was put to a true crosssection of the voting population in all the 48 States as follows:

"Most people believe the Government should not be controlled by any one group. However, if you HAD to choose which would you prefer to have control of the Government—big business or labor unions?"

The vote follows:

Big business	45%
Labor unions	26
Undecided	29

As might be expected there are sharp differences of opinion by income groups and by parties. The Republicans are overwhelmingly in favor of big business influence in Government, while the Democrats are not. It is significant, however, that even among the Democrats opinion is closely divided, with just about as many favoring big business influence as favoring labor union influence.

The vote by parties and by income groups follows:

	Business	Unions	Undecided
Republicans	58%	17%	25%
Democrats	35	34	31
Upper Income	72	9	19
Middle	55	19	26
Lower	33	34	33

The preference for big business is especially interesting in the present wartime period in view of what happened after the last war.

The Harding, Coolidge and Hoover administrations were generally considered to be influenced much more by business interests than by an other single group. If this war is followed by a wave of prosperity at all comparable to the 1920s another era of political rapport between Government and business may be ushered in.

Davis Denies Politics in Survey Of Polish-Russian Relations

By Edwin D. Gritz

Post Staff Writer

OWI Director Elmer Davis declared yesterday that his agency had circulated an opinion questionnaire concerning Polish-Russian relations among Americans of Polish descent in this country, but denied that the survey had political import as charged in a published report.

The survey was confidential, Davis said, with OWI serving merely as a medium to compile the answers for a "Government agency connected with the military establishment" which sought and obtained OWI's special facilities for the project.

Although Davis declined to name the Government agency, it was learned the Office of Strategic Services, headed by William Donovan had initiated the poll. Donovan's office promised newsmen some comment on the subject, but a spokesman later apologetically disclosed that "apparently we have nothing to say just now."

Davis pointed out since the survey was confidential, it could have no political effect or influence and added, "Nobody in OWI except the research people will know or want to know what the results are."

Meanwhile, associate OWI Director Milton S. Eisenhower issued a denial of another report that he had resigned his job to become president of Kansas State College on advice of his brother, General Eisenhower.

Eisenhower, who formally resigned June 30 but stayed on to complete some unfinished work, added, "I feel it appropriate to state that I have heard from him, both directly and indirectly, nothing but favorable comment on the activities of the OWI in his theater of operations."

William Lyon Phelps, Critic, Is Seriously Ill

New Haven, Conn., Aug. 20 (AP).—William Lyon Phelps, 78, author, literary commentator and professor emeritus of English at Yale, was critically ill today at his home here, and physicians said he might not survive the weekend. Prof. Phelps suffered a stroke several months ago.

Doughboys Want Good Chocolate For Christmas

With the U. S. Seventh Army in Sicily, Aug. 20 (AP).—American soldiers know they can't get home for Christmas dinner with their families—so then they begin to think up gifts they would enjoy.

A poll among many troops shows they want: Cigarette lighters, wrist watches, fountain pens, books, magazines, first choices of food they can't get in the Army, and, particularly, good chocolate.

The Yank soldier loves chocolate candy, but for some reason good quality chocolate rarely reaches the troops in the field. The chocolate provided in field rations is full of nourishment and complete with vitamins, but lacks that rich taste that comes in the old-fashioned nickel bar back home.

The soldiers do not want: Toilet articles, shaving kits, clothing (unless they can get special garments they asked for), or knicknacks which add to the weight of their packs without being useful in the business of war.

Church Leader, Now Soldier, Writes Poems

Lieut. Ronald Heaston Kaufman, son of Mr. and Mrs. B. Herbert Kaufman, 2842 Myrtle st. ne., is making a name for himself in the Army, not only as a soldier, but also as a poet.

Some of his works already have been published in the regimental paper overseas, particularly the poem, "To My Wife." Lieutenant Kaufman is now with the Sixty-seventh Armored Regiment in the Mediterranean area.

Before entering the service, he was an active member of Mount Rainier Christian Church, being instructor in the Vacation Bible School, member of the choir and leader in the Christian Endeavor and Bible School groups.

One of his best known poems is "A Soldier's Prayer," which follows:

A Soldier's Prayer

Dear Lord, help me to understand
The reason for this strife.
Why do we not heed Thy command,
To seek, not death, but life?

Why do we hate when we should love,
And wreck when we should build?
Why do we not seek Thee above,
That peace may be fulfilled?

Our Master walked upon this land
To bring good will and peace.
How dare we then to scorn His hand,
Which causes war to cease?

Have we attained a higher plane
By thrusting Him aside?
Not so, for all we gain is vain
If God be not our guide.

What can we hope to conquer, then,
By using hate and force?
Do we not fail our Lord again
By taking such a course?

What hope have we if we are wrong?
Where can we go from here?
Must we spread evil all along,
And end our days in fear?

The Answer

Look to Me, My weary son,
Incline to Me thine ear.
There's all too much that must be done
For you to nourish fear.

You have said well that force is wrong,
And love surpasses hate.
But in this task you must be strong,
Lest it design your fate.

Your Saviour showed the righteous course,
To triumph over sin.
But in the temple, He used force
To cleanse it from within.

Now you must fight with all your might,
Though paradoxical it seems.

Rustic Cathedrals

Chapels Built By Soldiers In Solomons

Soldiers on Guadalcanal solved the problem of no chapels by building their own, the War Department has been informed.

Chaplain (First Lieutenant) Christian Neumon of Woodlawn, Md., reported that the men of his regiment built three makeshift chapels within a few weeks after the last Jap had been eliminated from the island.

"These chapels have palm-leaf roofs and coconut-log pews, but they serve the purpose very well," Chaplain Neumon reported. "The men, too, are proud of their work and I believe they attend services as regularly as if a great stone cathedral were available to them."

Chaplain Neuman said the regiment arrived on the island December 17, 1942, and although much fighting still was going on they were able to have a "fine Christmas Day service" eight days later. He added that when fighting ended, Guadalcanal natives began to join in the regular Sunday services.

"At each service we now have quite a group of natives in the congregation," the Chaplain said. "These people had previously been visited by missionaries of the Church of England and seem to like Christianity. They have proved themselves pretty valued additions to the choir, too."

Asked about the personal problems of the men of his regiment, Chaplain Neuman said:

"They haven't many such problems that regular letters frfom home won't cure."

Army, Navy to Be Guests on Bible Quiz Program

Featured on the 125th session of radio's original Bible Quiz at 7 o'clock tonight over WWDC will be a contest between the Army and the Navy.

Outstanding Bible students from both branches of the armed forces will include both officers and enlisted men. Evangelist Dale Crowley conducts the broadcast.

Mr. Crowley, who marked yesterday his 1000th broadcast over Washington stations, is now heard in three daily broadcasts, including a morning devotional program at 6:45 o'clock a.m., an inspirational broadcast at 12:35 p.m.,—both over Staton WWDC. A third broadcast is released to Station WFMD, Frederick, Md., at the noon hour.

Minnesota Pastor To Preach Sunday

The Rev. Raymond B. Bragg, minister of the First Unitarian Church, Minneapolis, Minn., will preach at the union service at All Souls Unitarian Church tomorrow at 11 a. m. on "On Being Thoughtful." Mr. Bragg is at present acting as associate director of the Unitarian service committee and was formerly secretary of the Western Unitarian Conference. Mount Pleasant Congregational Church and the Universalist National Memorial Church are cooperating in this service.

Continuing the series of recreation programs particularly for teen-age young people, the film, "Imitation of Life," will be shown on the Longfellow Terrace Saturday evening, August 21, and on August 28 the feature will be "Dr. Syn" with George Arliss.

Editor Speaks At Bible Conference

Stating that it is just as important that the American people be prepared for peace as that they be prepared for war, Dr. Roy L. Smith editor of The Christian Advocate, the official publication of the Methodist Church, deeply stirred the audience of the Bible conference at Massanetta Springs (Va.), this week as he spoke on the subject, "The World That Is to Be."

The 800 delegates attending the final week of the conference, united together in a service of prayer for the men and women in the armed forces of the Nation, and for the return to earth of a just and lasting peace.

"It is of no small significance that there are in the United States at the present time more than 150 organizations made up of the most reputable people who are studying the conditions that are apt to prevail in the postwar world and who are studying ways and means for utilizing those conditions that no new war may result from our mismanagement," said Dr. Smith.

"In preparation for peace it is highly important that we shall anticipate certain conditions which are sure to exist. Preparing our minds for those days is as important as preparing our economic program.

"Within 30 minutes following the cessation of hostilities we can be absolutely sure that we will be confronted with a hungry world. There is scarcely a nation in the world whose food supply has not been disrupted by the war, and there is not a nation in either Europe or Asia that is not hungry at this minute. The invasion of Sicily has revealed the desperate need that exists among the Italians, and they are but a tiny fraction of the millions of Europe alone who must be fed. We can postpone the peace parleys for the cooling off period, but what we do about feeding the world will have mode to do with peace than the fixing of international boundaries."

Annapolis Retreat House Given $5,800

The Maryland State Council of the Knights of Columbus has presented a $5800 check to the Archdiocesan Retreat House at Manresa-on-the-Severn, Annapolis, for establishment of a library and conference room.

Frank A. Shallenberger, past grand knight of the Baltimore Council, made the presentation to the Rev. Robert S. Lloyd, S. J., Manresa spiritual director, at the forty-fifth annual State reunion of the Knights of Columbus last Sunday at Gwynn Oak Park. Shallenberger is also chairman of the committee that raised the fund. The new room will be directly under the chapel.

Scrooby Club to Meet

The Scrooby Club of First Congregational Church will meet at the church tomorrow at 2:30 p. m. to go to Hains Point for tennis and bicycling, followed by a supper and vespers.

Services in Parks and on Church Lawns To Draw Throngs to Tomorrow's Devotions

Typical of the outdoor religious services in parks and on church lawns was the one held recently in Lincoln Park, se., sponsored by the Central "Y" and neighborhood congregations. The Wiles Men's class of Keller Memorial Lutheran Church, conducted this program. William R. Schmucker, song-leader of the D. C. Organized Bible Class Association, is leading the singing, and Mrs. Margaret Moffat is organist. Dr. J. Harold Mumper, Keller Church pastor, was the speaker

With good weather prevailing, throngs of religious-minded folk will attend services tomorrow in parks and on church lawns.

Takoma Park community vespers will be held at 7 p. m. on the lawn at 8 Columbia ave., with Walter H. De Groot, chairman of the board of the deacons of National Baptist Memorial Church, as speaker.

Marshall R. Baker, president of the Box Bible Class of Emory Methodist Church, Brightwood, will lead the singing and be guest soloist. Louis Macklin, of the Review and Herald Publishing Co., will preside, and Frank S. Harris wil offer the prayer.

The Rev. Frank Shrader of Cumberland, Md., supply pastor of Epworth Methodist Church, will speak at the YMCA open air service in Lincoln Park tomorrow at 4 p. m. The meeting wil be under the sponsorship of the Conway, Douglass, Hummer Memorial, J. O. Y., Men's Minot, and Young Adults' Bible Classes of Epworth Methodist Church. John L. Bateman will lead the song service.

Jack Wyne, student at Bob Jones College, Cleveland, Tenn., will address vespers tomorrow at 5 p. m. in Magruder Park, Hyattsville, Md. A group of young people from Metropolitan Baptist Church will furnish instrumental music, and a Negro quartet from Winston Salem, N. C., will play.

Chapter Meets Monday

The Jeanette Ball Chapter of the Women's Missionary Union will meet Monday at 6:30 p. m. at Metropolitan Baptist Church for a "pot luck" supper, followed by an address by Miss Anna Hanie on "Ridgecrest."

Women's Society Program

Reports from the Westminster Training School and a playlet by the Girls' Interest Group will highlight a program of the Women's Society of Christian Service of Francis Asbury Methodist Church Wednesday at 8 p. m.

Dr. Taylor to Occupy Alexandria Pulpit

Dr. H. Kerr Taylor of Nashville, Tenn., former missionary to China and now educational secretary of the Presbyterian Southern Assembly's Foreign Missions, will occupy the pulpit of Alexandria's Second Presbyterian Church tomorrow at 11 a. m. E. L. Keirn will song O'Hara's "The Living God." At 9:30 a. m. Mrs. Donald Witten will address the senior men and women, and David D. Squires, the young adults, both on the theme of "God Gives Laws for His People."

Rev. Mr. Fricke To Become Missionary

The Rev. Theodore P. Fricke has announced to St. Matthew's Lutheran Church his acceptance of a call extended to him by the American Lutheran Church to become its special commissioner to the foreign mission field.

FRICKE

Following several months of training in leading mission schools in this country, the Rev. Mr. Fricke will be sent to New Guinea and India, the major mission fields of his church body. The plans include a survey of mission work in China and South America.

The Rev. Mr. Fricke is a graduate of Capital University and its theological seminary at Columbus, Ohio, holding the A. B. and B. D. degrees from this Lutheran institution. In 1932 he received the Th. M degree from Princeton Theological Seminary, Princeton, N. J. Preceding his arrival in the Nation's Capital, he served pastorates in Detroit, Mich., and St. Marys, Ohio.

He will move his family to Columbus, headquarters of the American Lutheran Church, by October 1, where he will assume the duties of executive secretary of the board of foreign missions upon his return from abroad.

Last Sunday in a special meeting St. Matthew's congregation unanimously granted a release to its pastor who had served this parish for the past six years.

St. Albans Boys' School to Give Diplomas to 12

A special summer commencement for 12 graduates of St. Albans Boys' School will be held in the Great Choir, Washington Cathedral, tomorrow at 9:30 a. m. with Canon Albert H. Lucas, headmaster, presiding.

The graduates have taken special work during the summer to enable them to graduate before entering the armed forces.

Canon Theodore O. Wedel, warden of the College of Preachers, will preach at 11 a.m. on the subject of "St. Francis of Assisi." The Evensong service at 4 p.m. will be addressed by the Rev. C. Randolph L'engers, rector of St. Columba's Episcopal Church here.

Jewish Leader Asks Study of Zionist Move

New York, N. Y.—A proposal that American Zionists give immediate consideration to the formulation and adoption of a huge program of financing "to provide for the immigration into Palestine of a million or more Jews in the shortest possible time at the conclusion of the war," was made here by Dr. Israel Goldstein, president of the Jewish National Fund of American and national Zionist leader, in a statement issued in connection with the forty-sixth annual convention of the Zionist Organization of America, scheduled to be held on September 11-13 at Columbus, Ohio.

Outlining the objectives and tasks that will confront the Zionist conclave, which will meet shortly after the adjournment of the American Jewish Conference, Dr. Goldstein declared "that consideration of the financial aspects of the Zionist program," must be one of the major items to be discussed by the convention. The convention will have to deal with the extent to which this program is to be "integrated financially and administratively with the United Nation's postwar program of rehabilitation and resettlement, so that the Jewish Agency for Palestine might be designated as the agent of the United Nations for this special phase of the general task. The question will also arise how far can Jewish financial resources be counted on in the fulfilment of such a program."

"These are questions," continued Dr. Goldstein, "which need to be opened up now while the general plans of the United Nations are still in the embryo stage. The Zionist Organization of America, which counts among its members men of successful experience in large affairs, should use its forthcoming convention to enlist the talents of its best qualified people in the formulation of this important phase of its program."

Father Lunieski of the Marian Convent of Brookland, D. C., will celebrate mass in the Polish language August 29, in the red and white chapel on the second floor of the Sacred Heart Convent, 1719 Massachusetts ave. nw.

The Polish class choir will sing responses and Polish hymns under the guidance of the Sisters of Nazareth. The mass occurs regularly on the last Sunday of each month, under the sponsorship of the Polish Club of Washnigton and Group 848, Polish National Alliance, by courtesy of the French Sisters of Sacred Heart Convent, who have so kindly offered their chapel to provide Poles of the city an opportunity to worship God as they would at their own firesides.

Chinese to Be Guests

The Young People's department of the National City Christian Church will have as their guests tomorrow evening members of the Chinese Christian Church. The meeting will be held at 7 p. m. in the amphitheater of Rock Creek Park, one block from 16th st. and Colorado ave., and a film of Chinese life will be shown as part of the program. All young people are invited.

Accent on Youth

Foundry Methodist Church Seeks Orchestra Candidates

Raymond Wright, conductor of the young warworkers' orchestra of Foundry Methodist Church, is anxious to secure new members for his group, and especially needs players for the woodwind, strings and piano sections.

Rehearsals are held Mondays at 8 p. m. in the Letts Building, 16th and P sts. nw.. The orchestra is planning to present a number of concerts this fall and winter, and also to play at many special church functions.

Wright is formerly of Wheeling, W. Va., where he was musically prominent. He is now engaged in Government service here.

The Gleaners and Crusaders Sunday school classes of Luther Place Memorial Church will meet Thursday at 8 p. m. in the parish hall, Vermont ave. and N st. nw.

The Intermediate Luther League of Georgetown Lutheran Church will meet tomorrow at 7:30 p. m. at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Bieber, 623 South Barton st., Arlington, with Jane Davidson as leader.

Daily Vacation Bible School Opens Monday

A daily vacation Bible school will open Monday at East Corner Baptist Church, 3738 Minnesota ave. ne., with sessions from 9:30 to 12:30 p. m., Monday through Friday. Children from 5 to 17 years of age are invited. The Rev. Donald Chastain is pastor.

Ala. Minister To Be Guest At Foundry

Dr. Gaston Foote, minister of the First Methodist Church of Montgomery, Ala., will be the guest preacher at Foundry Methodist Church tomorrow at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m.

Continuing its summer schedule, the church school will meet at 9:45 a. m., the younger departments continuing until 12:15.

The Hi-Leaguers will gather at the Letts Building at 4 p. m. to go to the home of Miss Carol Westbrook.

The Foundry Forge—the fellowship for young people and young adults—will meet in the social hall at 6 p. m. and hold its worship service at 7 p. m.

On Tuesday evening the young people and young adults will have a picnic at Miller's cabin in Rock Creek Park, instead of the usual Tuesday open house program.

The 99th consecutive supper and party for service men will be presented tonight.

Apostolic Delegate Ends Camp Tour

The Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, Apostolic Delegate to the United States, has just returned from a tour of five prisoner-of-war camps throughout the country.

His itinerary included Camp Wheeler, Ga.; Camps Crossville and Forrest in Tennessee, and Camps Wingarten and Clark in Missouri.

Hunt to Talk on 'What Is Man' Tomorrow

Harold P. Hunt will lecture tomorrow at 8:15 p. m., at the Baha'i Hall, 1308 I st. nw., on the subject of "What is Man?"

He is a hotel art decorator, pioneer Baha'i teacher in West Virginia, and former member of the board of the Huntington Humane Society and Council of Social Agencies and was an air raid warden there.

3,000,000 Children Attend American Vacation Schools

Chicago—More than three million children from 6 to 14 are attending daily vacation Bible schools in 90,000 centers across the country which are sponsored by Protestant churches and inter-church agencies, according to an estimate made by the International Council of Religious Education, a cooperative agency which represents 90 per cent of American Protestantism.

Children of all races and creeds from war industry housing projects, trailer camps, slum areas of big cities, and the homes of average Americans in thousands of communities in every State attend these schools, regardless of whether they or their parents are or are not members of the sponsoring church or churches.

Financial support is provided for the most part by the churches, but in some localities a small fee, such as 1 cent a day, is charged, or funds are given through offerings.

Lessons in Christian democracy are taught to these children, in addition to Bible lessons, and arts and crafts. Supervised recreational programs for all afternoon are included in some of the schools.

"Daily vacation church schools are helping to meet the problem of what to do with the kiddies for thousands of war-working mothers," states Miss Ruth Elizabeth Murphy, associate director of this work for the International Council. "We expect a definite decline in the rising amount of juvenile delinquency in many communities because of these schools in the churches."

Protestantism is meeting the growing demand for summer church programs for children despite the increased lack of trained workers and the fewer high school young people who can be called upon for assistance.

Recent figures released by Mr. Otto Mayer, director of research for the International Council, show that in 1942 there were 53,039 vacation church schools with 223,163 teachers and 2,090,042 pupils, representing increases of 71, 9 and 6 per cent, respectively, over the same figures for 1939.

says:
"Man is the image and likeness of God; that is to say, the PERFECTIONS OF GOD. The divine virtues are reflected or revealed in the human reality. Just as the light and effulgence of the sun when cast upon a polished mirror are reflected fully, gloriously, so likewise the qualities and attributes of divinity are RADIATED from the depths of a PURE human heart. Every man IMBUED WITH DIVINE QUALITIES, WHO REFLECTS HEAVENLY MORALITIES AND PERFECTIONS, WHO IS THE EXPRESSION OF IDEAL AND PRAISEWORTHY ATTRIBUTES, is verily in the image and likeness of God."

Virginia Methodists Meet

Dr. A. P. Williams, superintendent of the Alexandria District of the Methodist Church will be the guest preacher at the fifth annual meeting of the Methodist Churches of the Hillsboro charge tomorrow. The pastor of the charge is the Rev. Stanley E. Emrich of Waterford, Va. Rehoboth Methodist Church, near Lovettsville, will be host church.

Maurice Hough, superintendent of the Waterford Methodist Church School, will conduct the Sunday school lesson, beginning at 10 a. m. This will be followed by the worship service at 11 a. m. at which time the Rev. Mr. Emrich will deliver the sermon. All persons attending the meeting will bring their own lunches, and the luncheon hour and fellowship period will be observed from 12 noon until 2:30 p.m., when the afternoon session will begin. Dr. Williams is scheduled to preach at the afternoon service, and the meeting will close at 4 p.m.

This meeting is observed annually by the Arnold Grove, Bethel, Mount Olivet, Mount Pleasant, Rehobeth and Waterford Methodist Churches of the Hillsboro charge and attracts large crowds from other communities. It is estimated that approximately 400 members, friend and interested people will be on hand to participate in these services; this estimate is based on attendance of previous years.

William Gross of Brunswick, Md., will provide the amplifying system, and the choir of Arnold Grove Methodist Church at Hillsboro, will supply special music for the services. Mrs. Carrie Grimm of Lovettsville, and Ludwig Manoly of Hillsboro, will be the organists for the occasion. Ample parking space has been provided, and the public is cordially invited.

'Mind' Is Theme of Lesson-Sermon

The Christian Science lesson-sermon for tomorrow is "Mind." Services are held in all churches and societies at 11 a. m. and repeated at 8 p. m., except Third Church, at 5 p. m. All are invited to attend the services and the Wednesday evening meeting at 8 o'clock.

Among the citations comprising the lesson-sermon is the following from the Bible: "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful." (Psalms 1:1.)

The lesson-sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures, by Mary Baker Eddy: "When man is governed by God, the ever-present Mind who understands all things, man knows that with God all things are possible." (Page 180.)

"DEAR LORD AND FATHER OF MANKIND"
JOHN G. WHITTIER
Dear Lord and Father of mankind,
Forgive our fev'rish ways!
Reclothe us in our rightful mind;
In purer lives Thy service find,
In deeper rev'rence, praise.
Little Stories of GREAT HYMNS
Whether loved the simple life ... the freedom of Nature and the great outdoors. "To love God and serve your fellow men," was his philosophy of right-living. In this hymn he emphasizes the service and reverence of purer lives.

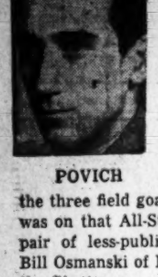
This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Chicago, Aug. 20.—The annual game between the professional league champions and the College All-Stars has been very hard on All-American reputation, we recall. The pros have had a way of deflating the college heroes.



POVICH

Tommy Harmon was supposed to be the big shot of the college backfield in 1941, but he was stopped cold by the Chicago Bears until the last five minutes when, with the college boys hopelessly licked, Harmon finally broke loose to salvage a bit of his reputation. But the star for the Collegians in that game was George Franck, of Minnesota. Franck carried the load for more than three quarters.

Davy O'Brien, up from TCU, was supposed to lead the All-Stars to a victory over the Giants in 1939, but O'Brien fumbled the first punt that was kicked and the Giants recovereed, to boot one of the three field goals that won the game for them, 9-0. Sid Luckman was on that All-Star team, too, but he didn't star, either. It was a pair of less-publicized collegians, Billy Patterson of Baylor, and Bill Osmanski of Holy Cross, who gained most of the ground against the Giants.

When the Collegians came up to the game with the Detroit Lions in 1937, Jay Berwanger was supposed to be the big shot of their team. He couldn't get up a gallop, and was quickly withdrawn. Tuffy Leemans of George Washington, with no national reputation whatsoever, won Berwanger's job from him while the Collegians were in training and it was Leemans' punt returns and passing that put the All-Stars in a position to get a 7-7 tie.

That game produced one of the memorable plays of the game's history. After Leemans had carried the ball to the Lions' 17-yard line, Wally Fromhart, the place-kicking specialist from Notre Dame, was sent in to try a field goal. He crossed up the coaches. After going into the line-up he called the team into a huddle and said "Hell let's forget a placekick and go for a touchdown." Fromhart sent Babe Lavore around the flank for the 17 yards and a touchdown.

Another All-American reputation had a rough night when Whizzer White went on the field with the Collegians in the 1938 game with the Redskins. White never did untrack himself and the spectators were disappointed and now highly skeptical of his reputation as an outstanding back. He left the field to the accompaniment of boos when the loudspeakers announced the substitution of "White of Colorado, going out for White of Princeton."

In the first of the All-Star-Pro games in 1934, the Collegians pregame notices featured Mike Mikulak, the burly back from Oregon who was soon to join the Cardinals, of the pro league. Bronko Nagurski was playing for the Bears and had read stories in which Mikulak had declared "I am going to be the best fullback in the pro league." Mikulak was backing up the line in the first quarter when Nagurski, carrying the ball, knocked him down, stepped on him, went on to a touchdown and came back to pick Mikulak up, asking him, "Now who's the best fullback in the pro league?"

In the cases of Davy O'Brien and Whizzer White, they simply had poor nights in Soldier's Field and went on to become standout football players with the pros, although Sammy Baugh is probably the best graduate of the All-Star game. Another fellow did very well, however. He was Johnny Drake, the Purdue boy, who played for the Collegians in 1937 when Baugh's 47-yard pass to Gaynell Tinsley beat the Packers, 6-0.

That night, Drake's job was to cover Don Hutson on the Packers' pass plays, and he did the job so well that pro coaches swear that Hutson has never been so well covered by a pass-defender. Drake saved the game by knocking a pass from Arnold Herber out of Hutson's hands on the goal line.

Bill Shepheard, who came out of Western Maryland to become an All-Pro back, had an unhappy experience in his appearance with the College All-Stars. That was in the 1935 game won by the Bears 5-0. Shepherd was playing safety man and fumbled a ball in the end zone to give the Bears a safety. The paradox was that Shepherd never had played safety man and the College coaches had two of the greatest sitting on the bench in Buzz Borries of Navy and Cotton Warburton of Southern California.

Bergman's Main Worry

Lack of Time Works Against Redskins

Only Two Scrimmages Have Dutch Worried About How New Boys Will Go in All-Star

By Merrell W. Whittlesey
Post Staff Writer

Chicago, Aug. 20—"Time," Washington Redskin Coach Dutch Bergman was saying today, "is what is going to hurt us in the College All-Star game next Wednesday night" and by time Dutch meant the short time he had to prepare his squad for the game and the long 60 minutes of same.

As the 30-odd Redskin members of the squad tried on brand new uniforms in the Loyola University stadium locker room in preparation for the afternoon workout, Bergman was fingering a notebook of plays he would not ordinarily be using until much later.

"This is mid-season stuff I have here," Dutch said, "and these kids have got to do their best with it by Wednesday night. This ball game coming up is one of the most important to be played in the country all year and my squad has had just two scrimmages, and in one of them backs were playing on the line and vice versa as some of the boys reported—late." The other was the squad game.

Schedule Is Tough

Bergman has asked the Redskins to give him their full time in working for this game. Their daily schedule is breakfast at 8; practice from 9:30 to 11:30; lunch at 12; practice from 2 until 5; dinner at 6 and a meeting from 8 until 9:30. Two workouts and a blackboard session right through Tuesday is the schedule, with two of the drills in Northwestern's Dyche Stadium at night.

Dutch and his assistant, Turk Edwards, not only have the offensive and defensive setups to go over but they have to take valuable time from practice for work on kickoffs, punt returns, etc., which usually can be saved until later.

Hopes for Fast Start

With scouts from every pro club in the stands next Wednesday, Bergman, nevertheless, will show everything the Redskins have if they can get it through their skulls in the meantime. The worst beating, and one of two in 10 years the pro champs have taken at the hands of the All-Stars was the Redskins' 28-16 defeat in 1938, and here is Bergman confronted with the task of avenging that defeat in his pro football debut with the most undermanned pro team of the series facing the greatest collection of collegians yet assembled.

Dutch is hoping for a running start. The Redskins will probably need a touchdown or two edge in the first half to offset the freshmen of Coach Harry Stuhldreher's squad in the second half. The All-Stars can field six complete teams, if necessary, to two full clubs and inexperienced reserves of the Redskins. "That fourth quarter," Dutch was saying, "will be awful tough."

NOTES—Receipts of the 50,000 crowd in Dyche Stadium will nearly match the gate of the 100,000 crowds of previous years in Soldier's Field, as this year's game has a $6 top compared to the $4 top of past games . . . Baoe Hollingberry, who coached Turk Edwards, Dick Farman and Rookie Frank Akins at Washington State, was a luncheon guest of the Redskins today. Hollingberry asked Edwards how much he weighed and Turk replied 262 pounds. "He means now, Turk," said Bob Seymour, "not when you graduated from junior high." . . . The "44" which Andy Farkas has worn for five years will be the property of Steve Begarus in the star game . . . Harry Wismer, who will broadcast the Redskin games for WMAL, will handle Wednesday's game over a coast-to-coast hookup. Two networks will broadcast . . . The Chicago Tribune, sponsor of the game, carried on alone here as the other Chicago papers virtually ignore the game . . . hundreds of youngsters patiently wait for autographs at each Redskin practice but Bergman insists on strict secrecy inside with no visitors admitted inside the stadium . . . Georgetown's Ollie Oja and Warren Plunkett, who played with the Rams last year, reported today . . . Sammy Baugh took an active part in the workouts today for the first time since coming up with a back ailment two weeks ago.

Cardinals Rout Phillies, 5 to 1; Cooper Wins

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Aug. 20.—Scoring all their runs in the sixth inning, the St. Louis Cardinals squared their series with the Phillies at two-all with a 5-to-1 victory before 12,678 paying fans at Shibe Park tonight.

Mort Cooper allowed only five hits, but was removed in the ninth when the Phillies filled the bases with one out. Howie Krist came in and retired the last two batters on pop-ups. Bill Lee, the Phillies' starter, gave the Cards all of their 12 hits in his eight innings on the mound.

Wyatt Pitches Flock to 6-3 Win Over Cubs

By the Associated Press

Brooklyn, Aug. 20.—Whitlow Wyatt pitched and argued his way to a 6 to 3 victory for the Brooklyn Dodgers over the Chicago Cubs today, allowing six hits of which one was Bill Nicholson's nineteenth home run and second in two days with a mate aboard.

Wyatt jawed with Umpire Tom Dunn about his judgment of balls and strikes and also got into a dispute with Manager Jimmy Wilson of the Cubs, who came charging from the dugout ready for battle only to have umpires and players restrain the two.

Braves Beat Reds in 12th

By the Associated Press

Boston, Aug. 20.—The Boston Braves squared their series with the Cincinnati Reds today by gaining a 3-2, 12-inning triumph over Johnny Vander Meer.

"Whitey" Wietelmann, whose bat produced one of the earlier Boston runs, singled home pinch-runner Phil Masi in the 12th for the winning counter. The first Red run came on Al Javery's wild pitch in the second while Lonnie Fry drove in another in the fifth.

Yanks Slug Five Pitchers To Win, 10-5

Victory Today Will Give N. Y. 11 Consecutive Series Triumphs

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Aug. 20.—The New York Yankees outslugged the Cleveland Indians today for a 10 to 5 victory that evened their series at two-all and gave them a chance to capture their eleventh consecutive series in the finale tomorrow.

The Yankees waded into five Cleveland pitchers for 14 hits and had little trouble winning although Atley Donald, who was resurrected as a starting pitcher for New York, was relieved in the seventh after Jeff Heath had hit his twelfth home run with one on.

In contrast to the long-drawn-out pitching battle last night which the Yankees captured 2-1 in 13 innings, today's tussle was a free-hitting affair for both sides, with the Indians themselves getting a dozen safeties off Donald and Johnny Murphy.

Mrs. Madigan Takes Honors In Field Day

Mrs. J. J. Madigan, of the host club, carded a 91—15—76, to capture Class A low net honors in the Indian Spring Country Club's annual field day yesterday, besting a field of 43 feminine golfers. The runner-up trophy went to Mrs. J. T. Powell, also of Indian Spring, who posted an 89—12—77.

The Class B title went to Mrs. Floyd Beasley of Manor, who toured the layout in 103—26—77. She was closely pushed by Mrs. J. P. Brantley of Kenwood, with a 103—25—78, and Mrs. Nathan Cone, competing unattached, who won a drawing for third place with a 104—26—78.

Mrs. Jani Winner in Driving

Mrs. George Jani of Congressional, banged the pellet a lusty 229 yards, 6 inches, to indisputably win the driving contest from Manor Club's Mrs. D. M. McPherson, whose best effort carried 211 yards.

Mrs. M. H. Dinneen of the Washington Golf and Country Club, required just 36 strokes to win the 18-hole putting contest. Her teammate, Mrs. T. P. Bank, was lucky on the drawing to break a five-way tie for second best with a 39.

Mrs. Stuart Wins at Chipping

The Dead-Eye Dick in the approaching contest proved to be Mrs. Delbert Stuart, of Indian Spring, who found the range on the 50-yard course to come within 4 feet, 3 inches of the cup. Second place in the chipping battle went to Mrs. Herbert L. Larcey, of Manor, who missed the bullseye by 5 feet, 1 inch.

Jim Turnesa Leading In Victory Golf Meet

Younger Member of Famed Golfing Clan Holds Stroke Advantage Over Sam Byrd

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 20.—Staff Sergt. Jim Turnesa of Staten Island, N. Y., carried the colors of the Army into the 18-hole lead of the Chicago Victory National Golf Meet today, using a torrid putter to melt four strokes from the Beverly course par for a card of 35-32—67.

The stocky little sergeant, one of the youngest members of the famed Turnesa golfing tribe, thus began another dark horse gallop through a chosen field of 41 top performers, reminiscent of his great ride in the 1942 PGA tournament—when he knocked off Ben Hogan and Byron Nelson en route to the final championship round which he lost 2 and 1 to Sammy Snead. Mike Turnesa of White Plains, N. Y., also was among the front runners with a 70, but Brother Joe Turnesa of Rockville Center, N. Y., kited to a 78.

One Up on Sam Byrd

Sergeant Jim held a one-stroke advantage over Sam Byrd of Philadelphia, one-time understudy for Babe Ruth with the New York Yankees, and Lord Byron Nelson of Toledo.

Nelson, missing the greens only twice during his round, shot a two-under-par 34 on the front nine after sinking a 15-foot putt and chipping dead on two other holes for three birdies. Another 15-footer gave him a birdie on the fourteenth and 34 coming home after he had failed to clip three more strikes from par by missing a series of putts under 8 feet.

Byrd was out in 33 with birdie putts ranging from 12 to 25 feet, and came in with a regulation 35 after three-stroking for a bogey which he nullified by reaching the 572-yard eighteenth green in two for a bird.

He Putts 'Em Down

Jim birdied the first hole with a two-foot putt then parred the rest in order for a front nine of 35. His 32 on the home trip was decorated by three deuces with two 12-foot putts and another of 7, and he grabbed a fourth birdie on the eighteenth with a 10 footer.

Grouped at 69 were Craig Wood, the 1941 U. S. Open champion from Mamaroneck, N. Y., veteran Harry Cooper of Minneapolis and colorful Jimmy Demaret of Detroit.

Another man in uniform, Sergt. Jim McHale, a former Philadelphia pro who turned amateur and now is stationed at Baltimore, posted a 70 along with Willie Goggin of White Plains, N. Y.

Eleven Equal Par

Lloyd Mangrum of Los Angeles, Ky Laffoon of Tulsa, Okla. and Pvt. Chick Harbert of Camp Grant, Ill., registered even pars of 71, making up a list of 11 players who equalled or bettered the regulation count.

McHale's 70 topped the bracket of 11 amateurs. He was followed in this section by Steve Kovach of Tarentum, Pa., Ray Billows of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and Johnny Lehman of Chicago with 74 apiece, and Wilford Wehrle of Racine, Wis., with 75.

Bill Dietrich Chased in Wild Flurry

Griffs' Splurge Erases Chicago's 3-to-1 Advantage; Haefner Winner

By Shirley Povich
Post Staff Writer

Chicago, Aug. 20.—The Nats decorated the score board with a big figure "8" in the eighth inning this evening and licked the White Sox proper. It was a very timely outburst, because the Nats were trailing at the time, 3 to 1. The final score was 10 to 5.

It was all of a sudden that the Nats got tough. Bill Dietrich had just completed six consecutive shutout innings and the 12,542 Chicago customers were in happy contemplation of a White Sox victory when things began to happen.

Among the things that happened were Sherrard Robertson's pinch-hit single which opened the eighth inning. Jake Early's double with the bases full didn't hurt any, either. Nor, for that matter, did the two-bagger George Case hit. That one emptied the bases of a three-run load.

Needed Only Five Hits

The Nats required only five hits to get their eight runs. They banged Dietrich out of there and he retired with the winning run on base. Joe Haynes relieved him, but he didn't relieve Jimmy Dykes' headache.

Before Haynes got anybody out, he hit one batter to force the tying run home, walked another run in, got clipped for a two-bagger and hit a second batter.

Mickey Haefner, who had pitched tolerably, went out of there in the eighth when Manager Bluege called on Robertson to pinch hit, and it was a happy choice. Young Robertson whacked a single down the right field line. There was no immediate signs that the Nats would get a big inning, though, because George Case forced Robertson at second.

And then Dietrich invited trouble by walking Vernon to put the tying run on. Stan Spence breathed life into the rally with a single to left that scored Case and moved Vernon to second. That blow also moved Dietrich to the showers.

Came Gene Moore, and he greeted Haynes with a single to center that filled the bases. Haynes' pitch flicked the shirt of Harlond Clift and Vernon was forced home with the tying run. Wild Mr. Haynes then walked Priddy and the Nats were in front, 4-3. Jake Early made it 6-3 with a line drive double to right center that Moses dropped after a long run. Haynes, still in there, hit Kampouris with a pitched ball.

Case Smacks Double

Robertson, up for the second time, took a third strike but Case was tougher. He tomahawked a double into left field and the Nats' sixth, seventh and eighth runs of the session scurried home.

Dietrich was considerable of a hero until that eighth inning. He gave up a run to the Nats in the first when Case singled, stole second and scored on Vernon's single, but thereafter he allowed only two hits until the eighth. Meanwhile he had hit a home run, himself, personally, far into the left field seats, to up the Sox lead to 3-1 in the fourth. Summed up, though, Dietrich's hitting was better than his pitching.

By their victory, the Nats solidified their hold on second place, and upped their road-trip record to nine wins in 15 games. Harlond Clift went hitless in his first game with the Nats, but he looked very reassuring to Ossie Bluege out there at third base. . . . His wild throw to first in the fourth inning on Culler's bunt, which enabled Kuhel to scamper all the way home, was not quite Clift's fault. . . . Kampouris failed to cover the bag on the play. . . . When George Case stole second in the first inning, he took undisputed possession of the base-stealing lead which he had shared with Wally Moses. . . . It was Case's thirty-eighth.

Sewell Bows As Bucs Lose Bill, 3-2, 7-4

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 20.—Truett (Rip) Sewell, the leading pitcher of the major leagues, took another tumble today as the Pittsburgh Pirates dropped a double-header to the ragged New York Giants, 3 to 2 and 7 to 4.

Sewell, who has achieved fame and 18 victories this season with his freak "parachute pitch," gave up 10 hits in the first game and one of them spelled his fifth defeat.

It was Mel Ott's seventeenth home run with Joe Medwick on base in the sixth inning. This wiped out a one-run lead held by the Buccaneers and gave Lefty Ken Chase his third triumph since joining the Giants. Chase allowed eight hits.

Bobby Ruffin Decisions Shans

New York, Aug. 20 (AP).—In spite of a performance as lackadaisical as a guy on a Sunday picnic, Bobby Ruffin had too much reach and boxing skill for Cleo Shans, the stumpy Los Angeles Negro, and won an easy 10-round decision tonight in Madison Square Garden. Ruffin scaled 133; Shans, 134¾.

Tippy Larkin, the Garfield, N. J., lightweight, finally broke his Madison Square Garden jinx by giving Harry Teaney of Cleveland a fancy boxing lesson for 10 rounds to take a decision.

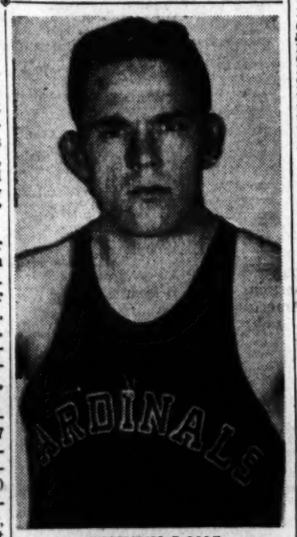
Johnny Long Will Return To C. U. as Army Instructor

Cardinals' Great Former Athlete Will Assist Coach in Basketball

Johnny Long, one of Catholic University's greatest athletes, will return to his alma mater this fall as a physical education instructor in the Army Specialized Training program as well as assistant to Athletic Director Eddie LaFond as basketball coach and director of civilian intramural sports, Right Rev. Msgr. P. J. McCormick, rector of C. U. announced yesterday.



JOHNNY LONG

Long, a football, basketball and baseball star of 1925, 1926 and 1927, and one of C. U.'s few nine letter winners, is best remembered, as one of the afmous "five reindeers," one of the greatest basketball teams in Cardinal history, which lost only two games in three years. Fred J. Rice, prominent local barrister, coached the club which also included Ray Foley, Jimmy Carney, "Skater" O'Donnell and Bill Harvey.

Recreation Dept. Net Finals Today

D.C. Tourney Play to Start At Edgemoor

Schweitzer Meets Shapiro for Title In Recreation Play; Top Women Clash

The District Recreation Department's men's and women's tennis tournaments will be climaxed at the 16th and Kennedy sts. courts this afternoon as the finalists clash for the titles.

And though the tournament ends today, it will mean no cessation of tournament tennis for the Capital, for the District of Columbia's tennis tournament will get under way at Edgemoor Club this afternoon, with entries giving promise that it will be the outstanding tournament of the year for Washington.

What was almost a foregone conclusion when the women's tourney started will come to pass today as first-seeded Mrs. David Grey meets second-seeded Sara Moore. Yesterday Mrs. Grey handily disposed of Peal McCoy, 6-0, 6-0, as she has done with every other opponent she has met in the tournament. Sara Moore had a little more trouble in defeating Louise Hohenthal, but she did it, 6-2, 7-5. The women's finals begin at 3:30 p. m.

Real Action Expected

Real action also is expected in the men's singles event at 2:30 p. m. when Britt Schweitzer meets Berle Shapiro. Schweitzer split sets with Lee Wood for the District Junior Tennis Championship last month, with the playoff still pending, and Shapiro has shown plenty of stuff in reaching the finals.

Shapiro also will play in the men's doubles finals. He and Dave Kay whipped Stanley Haney and George Botts, 6—4, 6—0 yesterday. They will meet George Shoemaker and Doug Love, who defeated Eli Gottlieb and LeGrand, 6—3, 8—6. The doubles event will begin at 4:45.

Meanwhile, 38 entries have been received for the District of Columbia championship singles.

In the singles Davey Johnson is seeded No. 1, Hugh Lynch No. 2, Austin Rice No. 3, and Roy Black No. 4. Other outstanding players in the tournament include Lieut. John Curtiss, Igor Cassini, Ensign R. A. Hill and Casper Nannes.

Singles entries will be accepted up to the time of play today and doubles entries will be accepted until 7 p. m., at which time the doubles draw will be made.

Pairings for the singles today are as follows:

3 p. m.—Maj. M. A. Erana vs. D. M. Collins; John Manchester vs. Charles W. Hackney.

4 p. m.—H. R. Hathaway vs. Andres Zerega.

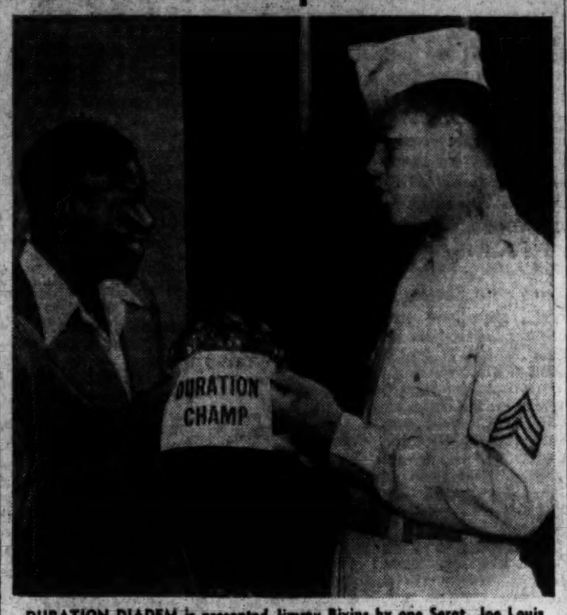
5 p. m.—Eddie Miller vs. Emanuel Vardi, David Johnsen vs. Don Garber, Lieut. H. T. Whiting vs. Lieut. John Exton.

5:30 p. m.—Philip Neff vs. Lieut. Kahl Springs.

6 p. m.—Austin Rice vs. M. K. Heddinger, Jr.

6:30 p. m.—Carl R. Meininger vs. Harold Tannen.

Bivins Meets Louis, Hears 'Duration Champ' Nomination



DURATION DIADEM is presented Jimmy Bivins by one Sergt. Joe Louis Barrow, who is best known as Joe Louis, heavyweight champion of the world. Louis chose Bivins as the best of the present crop of heavies and handed the Cleveland Negro the crown here yesterday, but warned Bivins it was for the duration only. After the war, Joe said, he may return to the ring and if he meets Bivins it may be a different story

Cleveland Boy, Who'll Fight Here, Is Told He 'Can Go a Long Way'

Jimmy Bivins, sensational Cleveland 178 pounder whom Joe Louis nominated as the "duration champion," heard it officially from the "Brown Bomber" in person yesterday as Bivins reported here to resume training for his 10-round bout Tuesday night at Griffith Stadium with Herbert Marshall of New York.

Louis, temporarily stationed at Fort George G. Meade before swinging out on a Nation-wide tour of Army camps where he will box in exhibitions, presented Bivins with a "duration crown" for the benefit of photographers and told the Cleveland youngster, "I've seen you fight. You're the best around now. You can go a long way if you have a mind to, boy. Just keep in shape and fight a lot."

Bivins Tickled at Meeting

Bivins, who never had been closer to Louis than a ringside seat when Joe fought Abe Simon, was obviously tickled at meeting his idol. Bivins, incidentally, almost missed Joe completely. His train, which was due to arrive at 7:40 a. m. was nearly three hours late and Louis, who had spent the night here, had returned to Fort Meade after waiting until after 10 a. m. A special car dispatched to Meade brought Louis back after he had finished his daily chores for the Army.

Bivins later repaired to Goldie Ahearn's new gym, 419 9th st. nw., and sparred with Teddy Wint, a better-than-average heavyweight in his fighting days. He impressed an overflow audience of several hundred with his footwork and punching power. Marshall previously had entertained the crowd by going through his paces, boxing with Tee Hubert, one of Sam (The Mumbler) Sobol's hopefuls.

"Sugar" Ray Robinson, rising young welterweight who meets Henry Armstrong in New York next Friday, on a card which will find local fans anxiously watching the semifinal which brings together Lew Hanbury and Sam Levine Coen, a tough Negro lightweight, will work out today at Ahearn's gym at 4 p. m. in what is scheduled as a triple-header workout. Herbert Mashall will continue his drills at 2 p. m. with Bivins taking over at 3 p. m. Hanbury will be making his first start since the Jackie Wilson fight, in which he suffered a severely cut left eye, which is now virtually healed.

LaRoque Sees Excess Funds As New Plague

By S. Oliver Goodman

Building and loan associations face the current problem of "too much money," President O. K. LaRoque of the Federal Home Loan Bank of Winston Salem, N. S., told officials of local member institutions at a meeting last night in the Hotel Statler.

The present plague of excess funds is in direct contrast with the crises of the late 1920s and early 1930s when loan associations needed cash and couldn't get it, he recalled.

The easy solution, he added, would be to refuse to accept new investments by shareholders. But this way would hurt loan institutions in the postwar years, he indicated, advising the officials to continue accepting investments "within reasonable limitations."

He also cautioned loan officials to beware of inflated real estate prices at this time.

"Under wartime conditions when materials are unavailable except for necessary war purposes," he said, "we are confronted with a serious responsibility in sifting out and selecting the sound loan applications . . . I am sure that none of us would consciously lower our lending standards merely for the sake of loan volume . . ."

Mr. LaRoque also pointed out that at the present time no one can ascertain the effect of modernized postwar housing on values of present-day housing, especially those properties constructed 20 to 30 years ago.

"Is it not better that we forego present-day apparent profits in order that we may be better prepared to meet modern home financing demands in the postwar period?"

About 125 loan officers in Washington, Alexandria, Arlington and East Falls Church attended the meeting.

Store Sales Off 14 Per Cent Here

Washington department store sales in the week ended August 14 were 14 per cent less than in the like 1942 week, the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond reported yesterday. Sales in the entire Fifth Reserve District showed a 9 per cent drop in the same week.

For the four weeks ended August 14, local store sales were unchanged as compared with the corresponding period last year. Sales in the entire Fifth District averaged 2 per cent higher in the same period.

Retail sales were at a reduced pace this week with slowed up sales attributed to summer dullness, Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., reported yesterday.

"There were few promotions to offset the seasonal slack," the business research organization said, "and these tended to concentrate on merchandise for the lower income group. Smaller stores, as well as larger establishments, are now beginning to receive goods ordered a couple of months ago."

Digest of Earnings

Here is a summary of net income reports yesterday of leading corporations:

Pullman Company — First six months, $2,833,267, against $3,747,233.

Pan American Petroleum & Transport. Co.—Quarter ended June 30, $319,863, against $467,848.

Monsanto Chemical Co.—First six months, $2,869,349 or $1.95 a share, against $2,133,765 or $1.37 a share.

Allied Mills, Inc.—Fiscal year ended June 30, $2,028,446 or $2.53 a share, against $1,952,629 or $2.44 a share.

American Chain & Cable Co.—First six months, $2,232,493 or $2.12 a share, against $1,402,397 or $1.27 a share.

Auto Plants' Output Soars 81% in Year

Detroit, Aug. 20 (AP).—The automotive industry is producing war materials at a rate in excess of $9,300,000,000 a year, according to the Automotive Council for War Production. This is an increase of 81.4 per cent over the rate of a year ago.

The rate was determined on preliminary reports for July which showed that production of planes, tanks, trucks and other war items had totaled $775,000,000 for the month. In June production amounted to $747,670,000.

In July a year ago the automotive industry turned out $427,150,000 worth of war materials, or at an annual rate of $5,126,000,000.

Merchandising Group, Stores Cited by FTC

The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) said yesterday it had issued a complaint against the Associated Merchandising Corporation, New York City, and 21 member corporations which operate department stores in some of the largest cities, alleging violation of the Robinson-Patman Act.

The FTC said the complaint alleges A. M. C. and its members induced manufacturers, producers and suppliers to discriminate in price in their favor by selling them merchandise at lower prices or higher discounts than those accorded competing stores.

The Federal Diary

Swivel Chair Officers Are Gallant Boys

Jerry Kluttz is making a tour of our sub-capitals to see first-hand what the 2,800,000 Federal workers outside of Washington are doing. His series will start tomorrow. But today we hope you can get a laugh out of this column, which was written by a War Department employe and who wishes to remain anonymous for clearly obvious reasons. Other guest columns will appear later.

This is a tribute from a civilian employe in the War Department to the gallant little band of men who are fighting the Third Battle of the Potomac.

"Gad! Are they gallant!

To a man, they'd rather be out in the field where there is some action going on. They will tell you so quite frankly.

"This is a helluva way to win a war," they comment with a kind of grim humor.

It is a helluva way to fight a war, too. Tied to a desk in the air-conditioned Pentagon for eight hours a day, with half a day each week and a full day each month off for exercise! What red-blooded man would enjoy that when he might be piloting a P-38 over Sicily or storming a Jap-held position in New Guinea?

Yet these men have kept a tight grip on their courage.

I saw a splendid example of this just yesterday. A strongly fortified brigadier general, holding a weakly defended position in the northwest corner of the Statler veranda lounge, was desperately in need of reinforcements. The supply system had temporarily bogged down and it took a full 30 minutes for the Statler's quartermaster corps to arrive with the second round. But did our hero flinch or fail? Did he retreat? Not he. He held his ground firmly despite all odds, and when we last saw him, was sending an SOS for more reinforcements. That, my friends, takes spirit.

If he hadn't knocked it off already, we would also take off our hat to the colonel who boarded the bus ahead of us this morning. There is a man who will go far—and always get a seat.

He was standing deep in the rear of the happy throng of war workers when the Pentagon bus drew up at Twelfth and Pennsylvania. A quiet little man, distinguished only by the egg on his face and the "I Am An American" button—beg pardon, Pre-Pearl Harbor Service Ribbon—on his chest. But a man to be reckoned with.

The moment the doors of the bus swung open, he launched the finest infiltration maneuver I have ever seen. The enemy was tough, but he was tougher. The closer he came to his objective, the more stubborn was the resistance. But it was never stubborn enough to stop him. A swift kick on the shins, a sharp elbow jab to the ribs, a nudge here, a shove there, and he had breached the line. Victory and a seat on the bus were his.

How lucky we are to have men of this caliber on our team. Modest fellows, they look upon themselves with wry amusement. They call themselves "The Waffle Bottom Brigade" (derived from the distinctive pattern of some of the Pentagon's chairs) or "The Chair-Borne Infantry." Bitter, authentic American humor, that. Yet, they're doing a bang-up job.

We know one captain who initiated seven buck slips and dictated three letters—all to blondes—in one hour. Incredible yet true. He was evacuated by taxi to the bar of the Army and Navy Club and is convalescing satisfactorily.

The perils of the campaign in this theater of operations cannot be overemphasized. Hundreds have been stricken by swivel-chair shine, a peculiar ailment localized in the seat o fthe pants, or Pentagon potbelly, aggravated by the monotonous rations of pie a la mode that they have to choke down day after day.

Worst of all is the nervous strain, the ever-present, haunting fear of the future.

One lieutenant in the office, an erstwhile bond salesman who had been commissioned directly, had a narrow escape a couple of days ago. He had been pining to get out into the field for months. Simply pining.

"I'd give anything to get out of here," he finally said in desperation. "I only wish they'd let me resign my commission so I could enlist and get overseas."

The major, a brute of a man, turned to him and said, "That can be arranged under certain circumstances. I think I can fix it up for you."

Surrounded and out-ranked, the lieutenant staged a strategic retreat to pre-arranged lines of defense.

"I'd never pass the physical," he moaned, succumbing to a paroxysm of coughing. "Weak chest."

Late that afternoon I saw him in the men's bar at the Willard, gamely pulling himself together after that close shave.

Not so lucky was the captain in the next office who had been loudly wanting to get out into the field for over a year.

It is such a pathetic little story I can hardly bring myself to write it. They actually sent him into the field.

That poor man had to terminate the lease on his three bedroom apartment, send his wife and children, with the nurse and chauffeur, back to New York, cancel his membership in an AAF officers club, and make arrangements for his banker to clip his coupons while he was away. Furthermore, he had to ship his complete store of goods to New York at his own expense. It was dreadful.

Just Too Ducky for Words

Newark, N. J., Aug. 18 (A.P.).—Despite six hours of "grilling," Newark police were unable to "crack" the story of 4-year-old Donald Adubato.

The lost child insisted he was Donald Duck until his mother showed up to claim him.

'Ah! Sweet Mystery . . .'

Annapolis, Md., Aug. 18 (A.P.).—It took Mrs. Samuel G. Walker, associate USO director, three nights to find what was on the mind of a soldier in following her. "Well, you see," he finally mumbled, "we're going into new barracks soon. And the first thing the fellows do is to read their love letters—and I never had one. Would you write me one?" Mrs. Walker obliged.

Appeal Won, Then Father Is Put in 1-A

Draft Unit Places Man in That Group Under New Rules For Nondeferment

Local Board No. 24, 1217 Good Hope rd. se. last night changed the Board of Appeals, 3-A classification of Sam Love, 29, a pre-Pearl Harbor father of 1355 Peabody st. nw., to 1-A in conformity with the new nondeferable occupations announced this week by the War Manpower Commission.

Love had won an appeal from the original 1-A classification on the grounds he was engaged in a deferable occupation, that of "signs and advertising displays." Since winning his appeal, however, the War Manpower Commission has ruled that that occupation is no longer a deferrable work and as a result the board last night put Love back in 1-A and informed him he could expect induction about September 12.

Following his hearing last night Love said he offered to submit to a preinduction examination and was refused. He said he has a foot condition his private physician informed him needs an operation.

He is employed as display manager for Brooks' Ladies Shop and has a 2-year-old son.

When first placed in 1-A early in the spring, he called the War Manpower Commission, and was told he had the right of appeal. He appealed, and after seven weeks was placed in 3-A by the Appeals Board. However, the 3-A classification became void inasmuch as in the meantime his occupation was classed as nondeferrable.

Appeals Granted.

Eight appeals for occupational deferment were also granted, as were three appeals for deferment as "hardship cases" and one appeal for deferment as a conscientious objector.

A total of 43 requests for deferment were turned down with the board denying 23 appeals for occupational deferment, 2 appeals for farm deferment and 18 appeals for deferment as "hardship cases." One conscientious objector who asked for occupational deferment was continued in 4-E.

The following men, who appealed from 1-A to 2-A, were placed in 2-A:

James M. Dunaway, 27, Concord, Mass., general manager Rochdale Stores, Inc.
Harry W. Hill, 34, mechanic, International Harvester Co.
Norman Lewis, 37, owner of taxicab fleet and repair shop.
Leon Goldman, 24, research chemist, Cooper Union for the Advancement of Science.
Robert W. Williams, 28, assistant chief operations agent, American Airlines, Inc.
David Coopersmith, 30, patrolman, Metropolitan Police Department.
Sanford P. Thompson, 21, Amsterdam, N. Y., assistant physicist, Naval Research Laboratory, and Clarence L. Wolfe, 29, drill-press operator, Babcock & Wilcox Co., were reclassified from 1-A to 2-B.
Three men, who appealed from 1-A to 3-D, were placed in 3-D. They are Joseph Y. Foy, 37, riveter, Crown Cork & Seal Co.; John C. Alston, 27, riveter, Curtis-Wright Corp., Columbus, Ohio; Julius L. Marcus, 29, grocery store manager.
James R. Brandenburg, 18, clerk, Potomac Electric Power Co., was reclassified from 1-A to 4-E.
William C. Hutchison, 24, Poteau, Okla., streetcar operator, Capital Transit Co., appealing from 4-E to 2-A, was continued in 4-E.

George H. Duckett, 29, general manager, G. B. Macke Corp.
John R. Hoffler, 37, manager, Seven-Up Washington, Inc.
Sida C. Goforth, 36, armored car messenger, Brink's, Inc.
Herman I. Savage, 28, restaurant owner.
Paul Shapiro, 27, drug store operator.
Ernest C. Hohman, 37, teller, National Bank of Washington.
Lee R. Stephens, 24, car inspector, Washington Terminal Co.
William L. Ashdown, 33, teller, Hamilton National Bank.
James C. Kelsey, 31, hauling contractor.
Francis J. Davidson 3d, 30, salesman, F. J. Davidson & Co.
Elwood D. Barnes, jr., 27, Richmond, Va., locksmith, Diebold Safe & Lock Co.
Harold W. Tabler, 26, accountant, Pennsylvania-Central Airlines.
Marlin O. Slentz, 36, electrician, L. K. Comstock & Co.
Seymour Gilman, 24, foreman, Sanitary Bat & Burlap Co., Memphis, Tenn.
Russell E. Patterson, 37, patent attorney, Cleveland Pneumatic Tool Co.
Ralph C. Summerville, 25, Brookeville, Pa., private, D. C. Fire Department.
Rollan Swanson, 19, student, George Washington University.
Walter M. Smith, 29, truck driver, Colonial Fuel Oil Co.
Henry R. Iverson, 36, Washington manager, The Trane Co.
Samuel F. Hall, 29, folding machine operator, George A. Simonds & Co.
Dana M. Barbour, 35, economist, Bureau of the Budget.

Two men, appealing from 1-A to 2-B, were continued in 1-A. They are:
Seymour Kalick, 23, radio instructor, War Department.
Arthur E. Lederman, 26, business machine operator, General Motors Corp.
John W. Quick, 29, taxicab driver and part owner of farm, appealing from 1-A to 2-C, was continued in 1-A.
Powhatan T. Digges, 31, farmer, appealing from 1-A to 3-C, was continued in 3-A.

Others in 1-A.

Roland A. Boobe, 21, laborer, War Department.
Jesse D. Smith, 32, messenger, Federal Reserve System.
Phillip J. Guindon, 26, clerk, Civil Aeronautics Administration.
Louis Miller 30, oiler, Brann & Stuart Co.

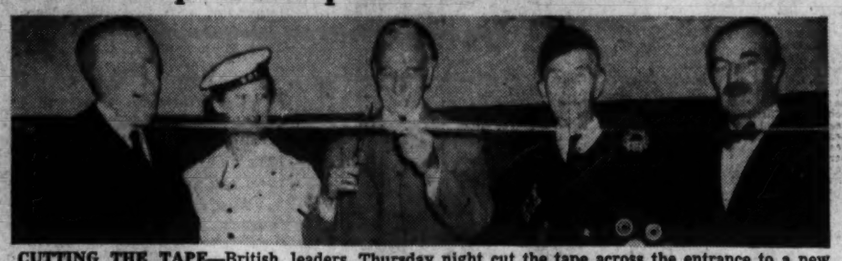
Sol A. Segal, 29, economist, Office of Price Administration.
Maurice Berg, 35, part owner, Penn Bootery, Arlington Bootery.
William M. Hunter, 30, agent, Continental Life Insurance Co.
Alvin Q. Ehrlich, 32, advertising man, Kal, Inc.
Floyd H. Eshleman, 32, clerk, Federal Security Agency.
William P. Marks, 23, plumber.
Leon Markowitz, 25, apprentice mechanic, Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc.
Jesse W. Green, 27, chief clerk, Office of Dependency Benefits.
Omer L. Barney, 36, mechanic, Kraft Sheet Metal Co.
Thomas W. Tone, 19, storekeeper, Naval Air Station.
Walter C. Stone, jr., 23, examiner, Civil Service Commission.
George Milne, jr., 26, personnel analyst, War Department.
Sigmund Scher, 27, assistant chief, sampling unit, Census Bureau.

British Open Empire Club Here



CUTTING THE TAPE—British leaders Thursday night cut the tape across the entrance to a new club they are opening at 1773 Columbia rd, nw., for armed services of the Empire—the British Empire Forces Club, they named it. Left to right, they are Ralph Close, Minister of the Union of South Africa; Bridie Hallisey, of the Wrens; A. B. Grant, vice president of the British War Relief Society, cutting the tape; Scotch Pipe Major James Garrioch, and Sir Ronald Campbell.

Phone Bridal to Yank in Brazil Balked, but Bells Yet May Ring

Left waiting, not at the proverbial altar, but at the telephone for six hours last night, Bernice Edna Lynch isn't discouraged yet—today she will try all over again to become Mrs. (Corp.) Bernard Trainor by oceanic telephone.

The ceremony which never came off was set for 5 o'clock in the law offices of Ward, Kellogg & Simmons, and it's strictly legal

It was all the corporal's idea and developed when he couldn't obtain leave from his base in Natal, Brazil, while Bernice was unable to make the ocean trip. The young couple determined to become married, even if they had to do it by phone.

The prospective groom notified the prospective bride that arrangements had been made for the telephonic ceremony at 5, when he was off duty, but it was later learned that the wires from Brazil were closed from 4 to 9. Further efforts to complete the call from Washington after 9 o'clock were futile.

On hand in Washington to carry out their part in the ceremony were the 21-year-old bride; the Rev. Purcell Storey, assistant pastor of the Mount Vernon Methodist Episcopal Church, and two witnesses. Also scheduled as participants were the 23-year-old corporal and two of his commanding officers at Natal, to complete the legal requirements. Only the wedding ring was lacking.

In common with all other prospective brides, Bernice admitted she had spent a sleepless night and had been unable to eat all day. Currently residing at 1630 R st. nw., she said, she'll be glad when the marriage ceremony is over, and she can return to her home in Withers, W. Va.

Army Change To Coal Eases Oil Difficulty

The outlook for household fuel oil consumers this winter is brighter than at this time last year, the Petroleum Administration for War said yesterday, and one factor toward easing the shortage is the Army's program to convert oil-burning installation to coal burners in the Third Service Command area.

With the conversion nearing completion, the Army announced yesterday 30,508,632 gallons of oil are expected to be saved. This is more than double the 15-million gallon saving the Army proposed for the 17 Eastern States last September.

The engineers have converted or are converting all but 1.2 per cent of all facilities that could be converted," Brig. Gen. W. L. R. Covell, director of the fuels and lubricants division of the Quartermaster Corps, said.

Conversion under way at the Army Air Base at Bolling Field, D. C., alone is expected to result in a million-gallon saving.

The overland movement of oil to the East has increased from less than 100,000 barrels a day in 1941 to almost a million and a half barrels a day, or a half million more barrels a day than at the same time last year, Gordon Sessions, PAW public relations officer, said.

No Rain Forecast; Weather Today To Remain Cool

Long-sought-for rain in the drought-stricken Washington area will continue to be absent today and this evening, but the temperature will be cool this morning and moderately warm throughout the day, the Weather Bureau forecast last night.

Yesterday's high come at 3:45 p. m. when 85 was recorded. The low was 60 at 7 a. m. The humidity at 2:30 p. m. was 32 and this, combined with the low temperature as compared with recent weeks, gave Washington the feeling of early fall.

Despite the moderate temperature yesterday, one heat prostration was reported when Miss Mary E. Moffett, 3, 120 E st. nw., an employe of the Stone Straw Co., 900 Franklin st. nw., collapsed at work. She was treated at Casualty Hospital.

Bible Class to Picnic

The Booster Bible Class of Memorial United Brethren Church will hold a picnic Monday at 6:30 p. m. at the home of Mrs. Margaret Browning.

3 Butchers Forfeit $250 In OPA Cases

Three butchers escaped prosecution yesterday when they were allowed to forfeit $250 each in Municipal Court after they had been charged with violating OPA price ceilings in the sale of meat.

Judge Nathan Margold permitted the butchers to withdraw not guilty pleas and allowed the forfeitures at the suggestions of the local office of the OPA. All three had previously pleaded not guilty and demanded jury trials after posting $500 collateral each.

Co-defendants Bennie Rubin and Harry Rubin of the central meat stand in O st. market, were charged with the sale of 1¾ pounds of veal cutlet for $1.16 in violation of price ceilings. They were charged with making an overcharge of 15.7 cents a pound. The complainant to whom the sale was made was Robert Proctor of 301 L st. se., who swore out a complaint stating the sale was consummated on July 2.

Simon Chatkin, also of the O st. Market, was charged with selling on July 2 pork shoulder weighing 5 pounds 14 ounces to a customer at 6 cents a pound above the legal ceiling. The customer was James Dean, 318 Elm st. nw.

These cases do not mean that forfeitures in OPA violations will be the rule, however. John Laskey, chief attorney for the local OPA, said the reasons for recommending forfeitures in these cases were:

1. The degree of the offense was covered by the amount forfeited.
2. Representations had been made that the conditions which resulted in the overcharge had been corrected.

Pickpockets Get $1020 in Terminal

Daniel DeMoro of Bridgeport, Conn., was robbed of $1000 by a pickpocket at the Greyhound Bus Terminal late yesterday. The victim told police he was jostled in a crowd by a dark complexioned man about 55 years old. The money, he said, was in a canvas bag in his hip pocket.

Midshipman John T. Gilfellon of Kenosha, Wis., of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, reported to police that his wallet containing approximately $20 had been taken from his pocket at the bus terminal at about the same time.

Auction Is Postponed

Auction of the Arlington Building, 1019 Vermont ave. nw., was postponed from 3 p. m. yesterday to 3 p. m. Wednesday. The postponement was ordered by American, Security & Trust Co., trustee, according to Tom Owen, auctioneer.

Your Blood Donation Needed!

Appointments may be made to give your pint of blood to the District Red Cross Blood Donor Center, 51 Louisiana ave. nw., by calling DIstrict 3300 before 2:30 p. m. today, or until 7:30 p. m. each other week day.

The need for blood plasma is immediate, as the time for the Allied invasion of Europe comes closer every hour. Our casualties in this war thus far have been light, but there is no assurance that they will not grow more serious when the actual drive toward Berlin begins. For that reason, the Red Cross needs every available pint of blood plasma.

The new location of the center is on the third floor of the Acacia Life Insurance Building, 51 Louisiana ave. nw., near Union Station. Individuals should make appointments 24 hours or more in advance; large groups should give two or three days' notice.

Public Warned Dirty Glasses Spread Disease

Dr. George C. Ruhland, District Health Officer, stated yesterday that the public should keep in mind the fact that saliva-borne diseases such as sinus and throat infections—can be spread by the use of dirty glassware in restaurants or at home.

Earlier in the day two of three food handlers charged in Municipal Court were said to have used improperly sterilized glassware. A third was a grocer charged with having a roach-infested candy case with roach powder near unwrapped candy.

Dr. Ruhland said that the number of cases of saliva-borne diseases could be substantially lowered if a "certain group" of restaurateurs would insist on maintaining cleanliness. He asked the public to wash their hands before eating in restaurants and to carefully wash glassware at home.

Declaring that the saliva-borne diseases are far from the epidemic point, Ruhland said: "However, the public can help by reporting violations of sanitary laws. We'll be glad to investigate all reported offenses."

Those charged yesterday were:

Thomas Bledsoe, restaurant, 704 Ninth st. nw., fined $15 by Judge John P. McMahon on a charge of having unclean glassware.

Mrs. Elsie E. Corridon, restaurant, 15 H st. ne., forfeited $25 on the glassware charge.

City News In Brief

Three Events Tomorrow

The Office of National Capital Parks has planned a historical tour of Arlington National Cemetery, a bird walk and an afternoon nature walk for tomorrow. The historical tour will start from the memorial entrance to Arlington National Cemetery at 3 p. m. Those interested in the bird walk will assemble at MacArthur blvd. and Chain Bridge rd. nw., at 7:30 a. m., and nature walkers will meet at the entrance to Dumbarton Oaks Park at R and 31st sts. nw., at 3 p. m.

B'Nai B'Rith Bond Drive

A million-dollar War Bond drive, culminating in a "War Bond Cavalcade" at the Shoreham Hotel September 22, was announced yesterday by the Argo Lodges of B'Nai B'Rith. The Cavalcade will feature, outstanding war posters. A 2½-hour variety show is planned, starring Mme. Genia Ury, French soprano. The drive is under the chairmanship of Mrs. Nathan Hurwitz.

Pan-American Scenes

The National Capital Parks campfire program tonight at 8:15 o'clock in Rock Creek Park at 16th st. and Colorado ave. nw., will feature "Our Neighbors Down the Road," a film showing the spectacular scenery along the route of the proposed Pan-American Highway running from Caracas, Venezuela, to Rio de Janeiro. A movie, short "Orchids of Tropical South America" will also be shown.

Thief Takes $24

Mrs. Goldye Golstein, 2701 14th st. nw., manager of the Aristo Cleaning Store at 2808 14th st. nw., put up a fight in midafternoon yesterday to defend her employer's cash but a white man succeeded in getting away with $24 from the cash register, she reported to police.

Barges Can Carry Motor Fuel Now

Ralph K. Davies acting petroleum administrator, yesterday lifted restrictions on river barge delivery of motor fuel to the East Coast area from the Middle West and Southwest.

The restrictions were designed to encourage use of barges for movement of heating oils, Davies said that with the increased transportation facilities now available, the restrictions were no longer necessary.

Meeting Wage Scale for D. C. Encouraged

Employers Told To Expect WLB Approval of Rate Of 50 Cents Per Hour

The Regional War Labor Board announced yesterday in Philadelphia that Washington employers can have "a reasonable expectation of favorable action" on applications to raise so-called substandard wages up to the 50-cent "standard" level set for Washington.

The regional WLB office in Philadelphia emphasized however, that employers now paying wages between 40 and 50 cents an hour must make formal application for approval before adjusting their rates. Employers paying less than 40 cents an hour are free to make adjustments up to 40 cents without petitioning WLB.

Sylvester Garrett, chairman of the regional board, said that it was not compulsory for employers to pay at least 50 cents an hour, but that the board would use the figure as a guide.

"In dispute cases where the employer and union disagree on the amount of the increase," Garrett said, "the board will exercise its own discretion in reaching an equitable figure in determining the wage adjustment, using the 50-cent rate as a guide."

Garrett's board covers Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, and the District. The 50-cent rate was set for all labor shortage areas in his region, with a 40-cent rate set for all other areas.

Specialists Work to Save Boy's Eyesight

Eye specialists were working last night to save the sight of 11-year-old Wayne Vipond, who with his sister were burned by lime while playing near their home, 427 Oakwood st. se., yesterday.

The girl, Donna, 8, suffered minor burns to her arms while the boy's eyes and face were severely seared. He also was burned on the hands and arms.

Police said the pair, children of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Vipond, were playing in a wooded section behind their home. Wayne apparently poured the contents of a can of caustic pipe cleaner into a glass bottle of water, causing a violent eruption. The liquid sprayed into the boy's face and over the girl's arms.

Both were taken to St. Elizabeths Hospital for first aid and the boy later was transferred to Episcopal Eye, Ear & Throat Hospital. Physicians said his face and eyes were burned and they could not tell immediately whether the eyes could be saved.

Several cans of the cleaner were found in the neighborhood and it was learned the acid was used to clean pipes in new homes nearby.

Rooms at Statler Looted of Large Amounts of Money

Six or seven rooms of the Statler Hotel were ransacked yesterday and a large amount of money stolen, it was learned last night.

Police Superintendent Edward J. Kelly would not name the occupants of the rooms or the amounts stolen, but admitted the thefts had taken place.

Later, police dispatched a teletype warning for all banks and business places to be on the lookout for a man who might try to cash two checks, one for $500 and one for $200. The dispatch said the man was wanted in a series of grand larceny cases. Whether the message had any connection with the Statler robberies could not be determined.

Bettejane Greer's Betrothal To Vallee Leaves Kin Calm

Wasington's singing charmer, Bettejane Greer, may be engaged to Lieut. Rudy Vallee—but, her family here isn't particularly excited.

Surprise was the first reaction of her uncle, Jawne Allen, portrait painter, when he read reports of her engagement to the bandleader in yesterday's newspapers.

"We did know he liked her, though," he noted mildly yesterday.

He said he had this week received a letter from the Greer parents, currently in Hollywood to supervise Bettejane's film career, but there wasn't even a suggestion that the starlet might become Mrs. Vallee.

Nor have there been any Washington-to-Hollywood calls to check the report, which Vallee now with the Coast Guard, made Thursday.

"I haven't bothered," Allen explained, "After all, if it's going to happen, it's going to happen, and that's all right with me. It doesn't bother me in the least, one way or another."

As for Bettyjane's grandmother, Mrs. Elizabeth B. Allen—as grandmothers will, she thinks Bettejane is too young to plan marriage, even though Vallee stated the wedding would be deferred until the postwar era.

The story goes that Vallee, intrigued by newsreel pictures of Bettejane modeling a WAC uniform, called her while she was still in Washington and suggested that she look him up in Hollywood. Bettejane didn't bother. They finally met in the typical wartime setting of a USO entertainment last winter.

Climax of Concert

Americas' Lore to Be Sung Tonight

ANNA KASKAS

OLGA COELHO

Five artists of international renown will appear jointly tonight at 8:30 o'clock in the first of two "Music of the Americas" concerts at Meridian Hill Park. This program and a similar presentation tomorrow night will bring to a grand finale the series of Starlight Concerts sponsored this season by The Post.

Anna Kaskas, now in her sixth consecutive season as a leading contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Association, will sing a group of songs by American composers. The Connecticut-born girl will be the North American representative on the program that also will include selections by Latin and South American artists.

Mme. Olga Coelho, the dark-eyed beauty appointed by the Brazilian government to sing her native folk songs in countries throughout the world, will be the South American representative.

In addition to songs of Brazil, Mme. Coelho will give selections from other countries of South America — Argentina, Venezuela, Colombia and Paraguay. Music of Central America will be given by the Charro Gil Trio of Mexico. The three singers and guitarists are Felipe Gil, Alfredo Gil and Jesus Navarro.

Two hundred complimentary tickets have been given workers of the Bureau of Budgets, the Office of Inter-American Affairs, and the General Accounting Office for tonight's concert. Tomorrow night's concert will be attended by the same number of workers from the Postoffice Department and the Office of Defense Transportation.

Tickets to the concerts may be purchased at the Cappel Concert Bureau, 1340 G st. nw., and at the park box office for 55 cents, $1.10 and $1.65. Service men and women in uniform will be admitted free of charge to the unreserved seat section.

Polish Social Tonight

The monthly social of Group 848, Polish National Alliance, and the Polish Club of Washington will be held tonight at 9 o'clock at Stansbury Hall, 5832 Georgia ave. nw.

Father Draft To Increase Nursery Load

Number of Working Mothers to Be Test Of Adequacy of D.C. Child Care Setup

The adequacy of the District's nursery school centers, in the face of the anticipated draft of fathers after October 1 and the necessity for many more mothers to work, will receive its first test Monday when three new centers will open for children from two to five years.

Mrs. Henry P. Chandler, chairman of the Committee on Child Care and Protection in the District, declared yesterday that until nursery school heads see how many mothers take advantage of the program, it will be impossible to estimate just how many additional centers will be needed.

50,000 in Class 3-A

Meanwhile, it was pointed out locally that although pre-Pearl Harbor fathers may not be drafted immediately after October 1, there are approximately 50,000 men in Washington classified as 3-A. Many of these are employed in essential industries and many others are childless, it was emphasized, but the figure gives some indication of the number of fathers who may face being drafted, thereby increasing the need for day nurseries for the benefit of working mothers.

"Although centers for school-age children have been operating successfully for five weeks, we still have many problems to iron out," Mrs. Chandler said. "In the first place, there is the difficulty of the mother who has one child of 3 and another of 7. Naturally she wants both those children to be in the same center, principally for convenience of transportation, but under the present setup it cannot be arranged. However, the advisory committee gave us the go-ahead signal today on working it out.

20 Centers Widely Scattered

"Twenty centers are in operation now, but they are scattered so widely that vast areas are left uncovered, and in these times transportation is an all-important consideration."

Furthermore, she declared, there are no funds available to provide for children under 2 years old, although young fathers who have been drafted have youngsters born since Pearl Harbor. Since December 1, 1942, the day care committee has received 22,079 inquiries, one-third of which concerned children under 2, she said.

Mrs. Chandler added that with only three workers available, the day care unit still has been able to approve and license 31 foster homes for white children and 18 for Negroes, thus making facilities for 200 children, since January 1.

Equipment Needed

"Our most immediate need is for contributions in the form of furnishings and nursery equipment," she asserted. "Right now we need 300 orange crates to use as lockers for the children—and such donations actually are invaluable to us."

Locations of the new centers are at the Truesdell School, 9th and Ingraham sts. nw.; 314 D st. se., and Smothers School, 44th st. and Washington pl. ne., for Negro children. The D st. building is equipped to care for 80 youngsters of nursery school age and 30 of school age.

Milk-Delivery Shift to Await Health Probe

Investigation to determine whether fresh milk or canned milk, or both or neither, has been the cause of a slight increase in illness of infants in Washington will be made before further consideration will be given proposals to shift daytime deliveries to night, it was learned last night.

Baby specialists are to make a report to Dr. George C. Ruhland, District health officer, before he concludes his findings. Indications are, it was learned, that fresh milk has not been responsible for the minor gains in infant ailments and this precludes any possibility for the time being, at least, of reverting to night deliveries. It was at first suggested daytime deliveries left milk too long from refrigeration, causing it to sour slightly and that this caused the illnesses reported from several sources.

Whether canned milk, more commonly used in infant feeding, has been a contributing factor in reported illnesses, was not known last night and will not be known for several days at least.

Meanwhile union milk drivers, through their secretary-treasurer, David A. Walker, said they preferred daytime deliveries. The union contemplates no action of its own accord until Dr. Ruhland concludes his inquiry, if then.

MAKE IT DO . . . .

Children should be taught at an early age to care for furniture. If your young "fry" accidentally pulls an object over the radio, leaving a scratch, don't scold. Let the little one watch while you do the repair job. In your best way try to impress on children who are of an age to understand, that there is a vital need for conserving all household articles

Taking Good Care of Furniture

By Martha Ellyn

Because there is so much less of everything, due to the demands of the war program, we must give exceptional care to all of our possessions. Furniture is among the merchandise whose supplies are dwindling. Since home furnishings are shared and enjoyed by the entire family, it is everybody's duty to help in furniture preservation.

Martha Ellyn

Hardwood which is normally preferred for making furniture, is an extremely critical material since it is a necessity in various war programs—for ships, planes, trucks and other equipment. This means that the inventories of furniture are diminishing and when the items on the showroom floors are gone, it will take a long time to replace them in identical pattern or design.

So when Dad falls asleep reading his newspaper and lets his lighted cigarette burn into the table top, that's a minor crime. If members of the family—or guests—set a drink on a polished surface and it accidentally spills and spoils the finish, that too is home sabotage. It is gross negligence too when the one responsible for dining service does not fortify the table surface against hot dishes. This is to mention but a few of the casualties which constantly happen to lovely furniture.

In normal times, when scarred and marred furniture could be retired to less conspicious spots, or sent out to be refinished, the situation was not so bad. But now with the help problem acute and refinishing materials scarce (in many instances unavailable) it behooves every person who has pride of home to watch his "p's" and "q's" in the treatment of furniture.

But accidents will happen. Dirt will collect. So if some of your furniture shows the wear of time or suffers from unorthodox treatment, then give the best "first aid" possible.

Purpose of Finish

It should be remembered that the finish on cabinet woods has several purposes. First, it seals the surface. All wood has a tendency to swell when it takes on moisture and to shrink when it gives up moisture. Atmospheric moisture (humidity — of which Washington has a goodly amount) has its effect upon wood for it takes up moisture when the air is wet and gives off moisture when the air is dry. Finishing materials seal wood surfaces and prevent swelling or shrinking due to changing moisture conditions.

Furniture finishes also facilitate cleaning. Dirt and grime, finger marks, spilt liquids on raw wood surfaces cause unsightly blemishes that are difficult to remove. On finished surfaces, dirt and grease are easily removed. Finished surfaces require a minimum of care to keep looking their best.

Furniture that has been properly finished requires a minimum amount of care. A cloth dampened in lukewarm water to which a little pure soap has been added and well wrung out readily removes grease and grime. Wiping lightly with the grain of the wood with a dry soft cloth completes the job. This method is equally effective on lacquer and varnish finishes. On a waxed surface, this will in time remove the wax but rewaxing is a simple operation.

Many furniture polishes give unsatisfactory results. Few of them fail to leave a film of grease all ready to start catching dirt again and many are an ideal medium for showing finger marks. Vigorous rubbing may remove most of the grease but as the rubbing is uneven over a surface, especially as enthusiasm wanes, it is likely to shine more in one place than another. Such rubbing soon destroys the mat or eggshell finish originally obtained with fine pumice stone. A bloom or haze is the result of poor materials or poor workmanship in finishing and can be permanently cured only by refinishing.

Use Polish Sparingly

A crazed or discolored varnish finish may be freshened temporarily with furniture polish but refinishing is the final answer. Polish is most effective on an oiled surface that has dried out badly but nowadays there are few pieces that are oil finished. If you feel you must use furniture polish, use it sparingly and wipe clean with a soft dry cloth. Most furniture stores have polishes they recommend and department stores sell the standard brands.

There is a correct and an incorrect way to dust furniture. Use a clean, lintless duster made of soft material. Washed cheesecloth is satisfactory.

Practical Suggestions

Perfumes, medicines and beverages containing alcohol dissolve varnish or shellac. When these liquids are spilled on furniture they should be wiped up immediately, and then the spot rubbed quickly with fingers or oiled cloth.

Heat marks on varnished or shellacked finish can sometimes be overcome by daubbing spot with a cloth dampened with spirits of camphor or essence of peppermint. When lacquer or synthetic resin varnish is marred by heat, rub with rottenstone or powdered pumice and linseed oil.

Scratches are the most prevalent of furniture ailments. Sometimes rubbing a light scratch with a cut piece of walnut meat will make it disappear. Iodine and mercurochrome are sometimes used although the iodine may have to be diluted to make the color match the wood.

But the best way to preserve the beauty of fine furniture is to give it good care, then it won't need to be "doctored." Protect table surfaces from ruinous effects of carelessness and accidents. Place capacious ashtrays in many strategic locations if there are inveterate smokers in the house. Supply pads for hot dishes at the dining table. Coasters under beverages will also eliminate many a furniture headache. Rooms of high temperature will also have adverse effect upon furniture as it may come unglued or warp. That is why we place water in rooms in winter when artificial heat is in use. Fine pieces of furniture won't be helped either by being placed by open windows.

Cream Leftover Vegetables

If the refrigerator holds odds and ends of cooked vegetables, cream them all together and serve them in cheese biscuit cups. To make the biscuit cups add 1 cup grated sharp cheese to a recipe of biscuit dough. Roll out and cut in 4-inch squares. Press into muffin pans and bake in a hot oven 10 or 12 minutes.

Bring 'Em Back Dyed!

By Ruth Gregory

You don't have to go around in sack cloth and ashes just because Donald Nelson asks you to make your clothes last longer. Not when there's a variety of home dyes available that can give new life to faded garments. There are 50 colors from which to choose, and they'll work on practically every fabric, all the way from intimate undergarments to your kitchen curtains.

Tinting is a particularly wonderful solution for faded and mismatched hosiery. One day when you have an extra minute, collect all your widowed hose and give them a fresh start. Use color remover first, otherwise they'll still come out assorted shades when you take them out of the dye bath. Stocking dyes are available in five good shades, ranging from beige to bronzy browns.

It's fine, too, for children's garments—Those little summer cottons which are still in good condition can be worn again next year if you'll give them a ducking in a bright-colored dye. Your own jaded dresses, which might have been tossed into the rag bag a year ago, your sweaters, underwear, blouses, will take happily to the same treatment.

Tinting, which is the simplest process, can be used successfully on most every kind of fabric, while dyeing, because it involves boiling, should be restricted to those fabrics which can take it—cottons and linens. Rayon, and so many garments now are rayon mixed, can't take it. The dyeing process, however, has the advantage, wherever it's safe to use it, in that it achieves a fast color. Tinting will generally fade out after several washings.

It's easier to do than undo. That's why you should check all garments for stains—the chemical in the dye will react differently to the stain (particularly perspiration stains), so you'll have in effect a dyed stain when you're through. Materials woven of two fabrics, like cotton and rayon, will also absorb the dye differently, so you're apt to get a two-tone effect. Plaids and stripes, likewise, can't just be blocked out by dipping—they'll show through unless you take them out first.

Color remover should be used (it isn't injurious to any fabric) when there's a question of a well-defined pattern (like plaid) to be erased, and if you want to get a lighter color than that of the original.

If you follow the carefully itemized instructions on the packages, you can't go wrong. And for not very many cents, and a few minutes of your time, can work some minor miracles.

The Gentler Sex

The Will to Fail

Mrs. Jitters who a year ago was reveling in gloom because the Allies were losing the U-boat war, because Russia was going to collapse or make a separate peace, because people at home were going to starve or be bombed during the coming winter, and because taxes were going to force a general return to sodhouse existence, is back on the job again. This time she is orally engaged in losing the peace.

Although most of her predictions didn't come true—we didn't lose the U-boat war, Russia didn't get out of the war, we didn't starve or go bankrupt, we didn't get bombed—she is still gloomily hopeful that disaster lies ahead. At teas and luncheons, in beauty shops and on streetcars she broadcasts her pessimism. "Even though we win the war," says she, "we're never going to be able to agree on the peace. Look how Russia is acting. Look at the French in North Africa. And, of course, we can't trust Britain. And just wait till China rises! It's going to be every fellow for himself."

As to this country after the war, she shakes her head hopelessly. Race riots. Inflation. High taxes. Millions of unemployed. Famine from trying to feed the Hottentots. Probably revolution.

By virtue of "inside information" (usually some elderly man dyspeptic) she relates that the Russian situation, the inflation situation, the food situation, the postwar employment situation and virtually all other situations are very much worse than we realize. Russia of course is her ace calamity card. Stalin is going to "play a secret hand" or outwit us, or double-cross us, or communize us, or do something or other that will upset the applecart.

Mrs. Jitters also parrots every moss-grown cliche she hears on the streetcar or at the butcher shop or elsewhere. We are likely to lose our shirt at the peace table when we get up against those smart European tricksters. In any world peace plan we are bound to be the suckers. All the colored races are going to gang up against the whites. We're going to have to be Santa Claus to the world. Europe's always been fighting and you can't stop it. Etc., etc.

Mrs. Jitters' talk is probably not Nazi inspired, though it serves Dr. Goebbels' purposes well. It is rather the expression of the fears of a negative and neurasthenic personality. But it can do enough harm possibly to duplicate Job's experience—"The thing I greatly feared has come to me."

Particularly now, when this Nation's relations with Russia are so important and the world's future peace is so dependent upon their being harmonious, Mrs. Jitters and her kind are unconsciously acting as subversive forces. Whatever information they may have about the situation is bound to be rumor and speculation, and by expecting and predicting the worst they strengthen the hands of those who would bring it about.

No one can deny that a stupendous task lies ahead of this Nation and its allies in making even the beginnings of a just and durable peace. We face other formidable problems internally—postwar unemployment, race relations, public debt, emotional readjustment, possibly another jazz age and social rebellion. But to get panicky and defeatist in the face of these tasks is not in keeping with national history or national character. It is certainly not in keeping with the traditional role of women and particularly of American women who have always supplied so much mental and spiritual backing to their men.

Not 'Fraidy' Cats Before Hard Tasks

Americans have never cried, "It can't be done" in the face of difficulty. On the contrary, the qualities of daring and the will to conquer obstacles have been emphasized as outstanding national traits by anthropologists and other analysts of American personality. One of our favorite maxims, applied to those who stand back and shilly-shally before an undertaking has been, "You're licked before you start." Psychologists and mystics both speak this truth in other ways. One emphasizes the will to succeed, the capturing of the successful or confident frame of mind before attempting any task. The other emphasizes the achieving of power of faith.

Now, facing a challenge and responsibility probably greater than any people in history, we need both the will to succeed, and the fire of faith. The place to start achieving these is in our thoughts and words. True more will be needed—study, work, sacrifice and infinite patience. But the minute we give up the sustaining faith that a way can and will be found to hew a road to peace and to make life better for all men—and give up expressing that faith to our "realistic" and defeatist associates, we surrender to all the Mrs. Jitters and their will to fail. And nothing then is as certain as that fail we will.

A Tour of the WAVES' Quarters

By Genevieve Reynolds

A thousand times you've wondered about the inside of the sprawling, impersonal looking, wooden barracks about the town. You've seen hundreds of uniformed women milling in and out the doorways. How do they live and play, what are they thinking about—these women in uniform? To find the answer to these puzzlers I went on a tour of the barracks for WAVES.

Ensign Ruth Baird Hawkins, formerly on the staff of the physical education department at Mount Holyoke College, now attached to the recreational and welfare department of the Potomac River Naval Command, guided me through the various barracks. First we went to WAVE qaurters "B" in West Potomac Park near Lincoln Memorial. Nestled among the trees are the winding, uninviting looking barracks. But inside, you'll find a large lounge, gay with bright blue and yellow curtains and slip covers. There are comfortable chairs and divans. On the walls, you'll find works of art—modernistic or surrealistic—all done by the WPA artists. Here and there in the smaller receiving rooms and lounges, you'll find more of the WPA artists' contributions—staues of varied sizes and colors.

Comfortable Quarters

Officers' quarters were comfortable. There were cots covered with gay but muted colored spreads. Matching broadloom carpets cover the halls as well as studio bedrooms.

Peeking around, you could see girls in shorts, slacks, housecoats—many washing and ironing in the laundry. Still others were manicuring their fingernails, rolling up their hair on bobbie pins or curlers. But once the WAVE goes into the main lobby and lounge, she must be fully dressed in uniform. Actually, the barracks look like a girls' dormitory inside. There's a bit of gay, carefree college air about the younger girls.

From there we went to the WAVE quarters at Arlington Farms. Because of the newness of the project, grounds are bare, no trees, no grass, but inside the buildings are cheerful and bright.

Out at WAVE quarters "D" on Massachusetts and Nebraska ave. about 2000 WAVES call it home. The lobby and lounge is furnished with the furniture from the Normandie, now being raised from the mire in New York. Instead of small rooms accommodating two girls, you'll find long halls with double deck beds. In the officers' quarters, you'll find the beds, rugs, and furniture that once filled the de luxe staterooms of the Normandie. Their lounge also is luxurious with the Normandie's best furniture. Predominately the furniture is a light maple. Chairs and divans are covered with soft green and rose materials.

Excellent Luncheon

The lunch served in the mess is savory and satisfying. For example, we had a delicious vegetable soup, asparagus, cole slaw, potatoes and meat balls, hot cocoa, bread, butter, and raisin pie.

Certainly, the girls don't lack for comforts. What they miss more is a real home. But more about that later.

U. S. Navy Photo

Three members of the Women's Reserves at home in their quarters in Washington, an apartment at 18th and G sts. northwest, which was taken over by the Navy while under construction and converted into a typical WAVE dormitory. Shown here are Radioman Wilma Criley of Chicago (on top of double decker bunk), Seaman Lee Gridley of Chicago (on lower bunk) and Storekeeper Helen Barr of Philadelphia

Inquiring into the recreational facilities for the WAVES, I was told: "The WAVES are part of the Navy, hence they have the same recreation as men. We don't give or deny them any privileges."

Throughout the barracks, in lobby, lounges and halls, you'll see notices of badminton tournaments, archery classes or contests, and tennis games. Those are the events taking place on the grounds. Then you'll see notices of community entertainment. USO dances, special invitations from various groups.

At each quarters you'll find a trained, competent recreational officer. Working with her are recreational council members. Together they map out a complete recreational program for the WAVES. Where there is sufficient ground space, emphasis is placed on outdoor sports. Otherwise indoor games and sports take precedence.

Programs Mapped

Already dramatic programs for all are being mapped out and dances planned. Swimming pools and horseback riding nooks as well as bicycles-to-rent-stands are located and the information passed on to the girls. Glee clubs and bowling alleys are springing up. WAVE headquarters A has started an all-girl orchestra. Assistant band master of the Navy Band is directing the group temporarily. Educational classes such as Spanish are coming into being. Juke boxes, record players and radios furnish music for the girls in their lounges. Still more plans are in the offing for other forms of entertainment.

Comfortable in their own quarters and happy in their work, still the WAVES yearn for a touch of the home life they have given up temporarily. The answer seems to be for civilians to do a little war work in their own homes—and entertain small groups of service women. According to recreation experts, this is not easily accomplished by a blind invitation from a hospitable stranger for five WAVES (just any five) to come to tea.

The ideal is for women with homes to make an effort to establish personal, friendly contacts with individual WAVES. This might be done through churches, State societies, the service centers where so many women do volunteer work, through sororities, or through word from neighbors back home that Mary Jane is in the Navy in Washington. Then ask Mary Jane to your home—and let it be a real home, where she can be at ease and feel free to drop in with friends or dates. But don't ask the group to many questions about their work. First, they may not be permitted to answer them and secondly, they would like to relax and forget work.

Remember a WAVE is still a woman—with the same feelings and dislikes, interests, etc., that she had before she donned a uniform.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Miss Haworth is now on vacation. Her column will be resumed August 23.

Your Figure, Madame! By Ida Jean Kain

"Please tell us just what exercise will really slim down the hips—and no fooling! That's the call for help that comes in most often in these days of the emergency spread.

If you are alarmed at the rapidity with which this measurement exceeds bounds, put your mind at rest and the right muscles to work. You can clip off one inch in two weeks and keep up the pace until you are streamlined.

Let me tell you about the hip muscles and the movements that reach them. I want you to know exactly what you are about. There is the big, fleshy muscle with the formidable name—fluteus maximus— on the back of the hip. When it loses tone, you just about lose your figure. Then, there's the gluteus medius, a short thick muscle that gives the side of the hip its round contour, and, lying just underneath, the gluteus minimus. These are the muscles you want to put to work to slim down the hips.

Now, to get at the big muscle on the back of the hip, you have to extend the leg, front or back, up to an angle of 45 degrees, or swing it against resistance. To reach the side hip muscles, you have to extend the leg sideward, with trunk held erect. Here is a program that uses all the movements, tones all the muscles, and will slim any hipline.

Position: Stand erect with hand on chairback at side.

Movement: Swing opposite leg back and forth, from the hip, to a 45-degree angle—or more, if you can make it! Keep swinging for 20 counts. Rest, and swing the other leg.

Position: Stand facing chair, with hands on the back for support.

Movement: Shift weight to one foot, and prepare to circle with the other. Keep the knee straight, point toes hard, and circle leg out to side and around in back. Do not sway the hips in moving the leg. Keep trunk perfectly erect. Keep both knees straight. Rest, and perform with other leg.

Position: Stand erect with feet parallel, body relaxed.

Movement: Tense the muscles on the backs of the hips and hold trunk erect as you thrust the left leg backward from the hip in a series of short, staccatic kicks, knee straight. About five times will be enogh, then repeat on other leg.

Position: Down on all fours with weight on hands and feet—in the position of a sprinter at the starting line, one foot forward, the other back.

Movement: Reverse the position of the feet. Continue, 10 counts. Put some vim and vigor into it.

When you have finished that workout, stand up and shake alternate legs loosely from the hips to get rid of any tension kinks in the muscles. Then, go lie down and rest!

Your Baby and Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

A mother is sure her baby will enjoy his bath. She's heard so many a mother say, "Oh, he just loves his bath. I can hardly get him out of it," she is ill-prepared for a baby who screams lustily at sight of the tub and every single minute he is in it.

Seductive water toys, which snare his attention, work well with some children. Some are too young to be interested. Probably the answer to the antipathy lies in the baby's earliest experiences. An amateur mother fearful the soaped baby may slip from her grasp, unconsciously tightens her hand on the soft thigh, until her fingers may be pressing painfully.

With so many things to think about it isn't much wonder she may forget something and have to lift the baby in or out a couple of times before she is ready to finish the bath. And as for the water, if it is tested by the hot-water-hardened hand of the parent it may easily be near-scalding to the tender skin of an infant. One or two such experiences and the baby is forever suspicious of the pleasurable nature of the daily bath.

There are a few simple methods by means of which the baby may have his shattered illusions mended. One is to stop the tub-bathing for a month or so and allow the baby to forget he has slipped around dizzily, got soap in his eyes or was parboiled.

If the sight of the water turns on the screams, mask it with a large bath towel spread over the top of the tub. Baby will sink into the tub without being aware we are putting something over on him.

Use a bath thermometer or a deep, slow plunge with the parental elbow into the water so that one can judge its temperature accurately. Ninenty-eight to 10 degrees Fahrenheit are about right for the small baby.

Latin-American Newspapermen Have Full Schedule in Capital

Group Will Lunch Tomorrow With Members Of Inter-American Defense Board

The group of journalists from Latin America, who are currently official guests in the city, hold the Capital's entertainment spotlight this weekend.

Since their arrival in Washington on Thursday, these newsmen from Colombia, Ecuador and Venezuela have kept to a breathtaking schedule. They have been received officially by Dr. Leo Rowe, director of the Pan American Union; by Victor G. Borella of the Office of the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs; made tours to historic landmarks, visited the wounded at Walter Reed Hospital and been guests at a number of fetes in their honor.

Tomorrow their itineraty calls for a luncheon at El Retiro, recreation center in Maryland for members of the Inter-American Defense Board, where Maj. Gen. Blanton Winship will be host.

In the afternoon the Venezuelan journalists will be guests of honor at a reception to be given by Antonia Davila-Delgado, Shipping Coordinator of the Venezuelan government.

The Venezuelan group will be honored this afternoon at a reception by the Ambassador of Venezuela and Senora de Escalante at the embassy from 5 to 7:30 o'clock, and last night Capt. Colon Eloy Alfaro, Ambassador of Ecuador, entertained for the Ecuadorians with a dinner at the Army and Navy Club.

Will Continue Schedule Monday

Members of the National Press Club, at whose invitation the journalists are in this country, were hosts at a luncheon for them yesterday, and the group later made a trip to Mount Vernon.

Continuing their schedule on Monday, they will be received by the Acting Secretary of State, Sumner Welles, at the State Department. From there they will continue to a luncheon to be given by David Finley, Director of the National Gallery of Art, and in the late afternoon John Lockwood of the Office of the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs will entertain them at a reception.

Tuesday morning they will attend a memorial ceremony at the Pan American Union and hear an address by the Ambassador of Venezuela. The ceremony will honor the late Dr. Gil Borges, former Assistant Director of the Pan American Union. At 4 o'clock they will be present at President Roosevelt's press conference at the White House, thus bringing to a close their six-day stay in the Capital.

Are Here Following 10,000-Mile Trip

The newsmen are in Washington following a 10,000-mile tour of war-production plants and cultural centers in the United States. The route they covered took them to shipyards in New Orleans and Los Angeles; Army and Navy training camps and stations in Georgia; Randolph Field in Texas, the Mare Island Navy Yard, the Great Lakes Naval Training Station; Chicago, Detroit, Buffalo and New York.

In the group from Colombia are Jose Joaquin Jimenez of El Tiempo, Severo Reyes Gamboa of La Razon and Antonia Ribera of El Liberal, all from Bogota. Those from Ecuador include Jaime Barrera, El Comercio of Quito and an officer in the Press Information Bureau of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; Abel Romeu Castillo of El Telegrafo of Guayaquil; Luis A. Moscoso Vega of El Mercurio of Cuenca; Juan Emilio Murillo of El Telegrafo of Guayaquil and president of the Ecuadorian Journalists Association, and Ismael Perez Castro of El Universal of Guayaquil.

From Venezuela are Jose Miguel Ferrer, press officer of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; Pascual Venegas of El Universal, Caracas, president of the Venezuelan Writers Association; Manuel Pocaterra, El Heraldo, Caracas, president of the Venezuelan Journalists Association; Luis Esteban Rey of Ahora, Caracas, and Ramon Villasmil of Panorama, Maracaibo.

The current date, approximately, marks the fifteenth year this department has been tottering around the local boulevards and making safari into far places in search of items of foolish luxe, and a few weeks' installments are being devoted to some of its happier recollections of this decade and a half.

A Reporter Remembers:

The days when, at the first fall of snow or even a suspicion of it, I used to hire Pat Rafferty's sleigh off the Plaza cab rank and race Maj. William Kennelly, president of the NYAC, who owned his own cutter, for a magnum of champagne in Central Park. Since the gallant major always raced from the Athletic Club in 59th st. to the Sheepfold on the Green, and since I invariably raced from the Madison in 58th st. to the Central Park Casino, we both almost inevitably won and received magnums of wine from the managements, grateful for the publicity and good-old-days atmosphere.

The wedding of Tony Williams, the social tailor to New York's bright young men, where I served as head usher and every one of the 12 ushers wore a different arrangement of morning clothes. So did the attendants of the bride, whose father, George LeBoutillier, was president of Best & Co. At the reception afterward Howard Davis, business manager of the Herald Tribune, was heard to address Mr. LeBoutillier. "George," he queried, "however are you going to get those dresses off those girls, get them drycleaned and back in the show windows by the time you open for business tomorrow morning?"

Such personal knickknacks as the matches used by Geoffrey Parsons in match games at Bleeck's, made of red gold with cabochon rubies for heads; the Cartier champagne swizzle of solid platinum worn by Alfred Barton on his watch chain; George Buchanan Fife's inevitable bat-wing collar and butterfly bow tie; the crimson-satin-lined opera cloak of H. T. Parker of the lamented Boston Evening Transcript, photographer Howard Cagle's evening studs of diamonds, cut to resemble flash bulbs.

Finding myself in the steam room in the Finnish bath at Charlie Farrell's Racquet Club at Palm Springs with Boris Karloff and Peter Lorre at the same time, and wondering what my chances were of escaping alive.

The Sunday afternoon in mid-August in Denver that Evalyn Walsh McLean took it into her head to give a dinner party of fantastic proportions that evening at the Brown Palace Hotel and how, 6 hours later, we sat down to a full-dress, white-tie turnout with two name bands, enormous ice elephants full of fresh caviar, quadruple bottles of Bollinger '26, roast Mexican quail and the creme de la creme d'Isigny of Denver society. Only the Brown Palace and only Evie McLean could contrive such a magnificence.

The opening night, years ago, of Peter Arno's dramatic nonesuch, "Here Goes the Bride," a dingus allegedly based on his own Reno experiences in which he engaged in a slight shooting with Cornelius Vanderbilt, jr. The show was such a terrible bust that, although Jock Whitney had taken over the Starlit Roof of the Waldorf for a celebration afterward, nobody but the hard-boiled press had the nerve to show up. Fifteen or twenty reporters did away with the caviar, cigars and champagne intended for a hundred-odd invitees.

The costly Lagonda motorcar once possessed by Peter Moon, the Chicago playboy, which had three or four speeds backward as well as four or five forward gears. The anecdote told by Helen Hayes about her husband, now the Maj. Charlie McArthur, who during the first cosmic uproar was a private of determined enlisted status. In World War II the Army finally prevailed upon him to accept a majority for sufficient military reasons, and Miss Hayes, at lunch one day at the Colony with Nunnally Johnson, Columnist Jimmy Cannon and several gentlemen rankers, inadvertently let slip the announcement of Charlie's impending commission. The rest of the table, recoiling as in the presence of a puff adder, pretended to leave, and McArthur, pretending consciousness of shame and obliquy, attempted to stay their going. "Aw, please, fellers, be reasonable," he pleaded. "Please let me drink with you. After all, we can't all be privates!"

The time in the Ritz Bar in Paris when I introduced Prince Mike Romanoff (Harry Gurguson) to the authentic Prince Michael Romanoff, the accomplished musician, and Prince Mike leveled an accusatory finger at the real Michael and shouted "This man is an imposter. Throw him out!"

The Easter Parade on Fifth ave. in which I appeared on the top of a horse-drawn coach with Ethel Merman, Monty Woolley, Bert Lahr and Peggy LeBoutillier Williams on such a subzero day that everybody had to drink brandy out of a bottle to keep from freezing to death then and there. Woolley dropped the bottle and it fell to the pavement with a hideous crash right in front of St. Patrick's Cathedral.

Purely Personal

Senora de Jimenez, wife of the Ambassador of Panama, has returned to the Capital after a visit to her home country. It's reunion for the chatelaine of the embassy with her son-in-law and daughter, the Second Secretary of Panama Embassy and Senora de Morrice, who arrived here several weeks ago from Guatemala where Senor Morrice had been stationed.

Miss Marian Louise Beck Married to Daniel Underdown Boothe, A. U. S.

Reception at Statler Followed Ceremony At St. Stephen's

The St. Stephen and the Incarnation Church was the setting last evening for the marriage of Miss Marian Louise Beck, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William E. Beck, jr., to Daniel Underdown Boothe, AUS, son of Mr. and Mrs. John E. Boothe of Washington and Greensboro, N. C. The Rev. Flint Kellogg officiated at the candlelight service before an altar banked with palms and pink gladioli.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a princess style gown of white satin, trimmed with lace which extended to the end of the full circular train. Her full-length veil of bridal illusion was held in place by a Mary, Queen of Scots hat of matching lace. She carried a shower bouquet of white roses.

Miss Jane Carter Howard was the maid of honor and the bridesmaids were Miss Elizabeth Powers and Miss Ruth Walton. Miss Howard wore a dress of hyacinth blue taffeta and carried a bouquet of deep rose asters. Her Juliet cap of hyacinth blue was trimmed at the back with matching flowers. The bridesmaids wore dresses like that of the honor attendant in rose taffeta. Their rose Juliet caps were trimmed with hyacinth blue asters and they carried matching bouquets.

Yeoman FC Maugan Hodge, USNR, served as best man and the ushers were Robert James, Clark Hudak, Harvey Holland, James Kinsman, Carroll Rowny and Deane Keith, all of the Army of the United States.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the Statler Hotel. When the couple left on their wedding trip, the bride was wearing an aqua crepe suit, navy accessories and a shoulder corsage of orchids.

The bride is a graduate of the University of Maryland and a member of Alpha Omicron Pi sorority. Her husband is completing a course in civil engineering at the University of Maryland under the Army's Specialized Training Program. He is a member of Sigma Nu fraternity.

Mr. and Mrs. Levi H. David whose marriage took place on Tuesday at the Mayflower Hotel, will be at home at 4316 Twenty-eighth Place, Mt. Rainer, Md., when they return from their wedding trip.

The bride is the former Miss Bessie Goodman of Baltimore, daughter of Mrs. Rebecca B. Goodman. Mr. David is an attorney in Washington. Only members of the two families were present at the ceremony which was performed by Rabbi Hugo Schiff of Alexandria, Va. A wedding luncheon followed the ceremony.

Birthday Party

Mr. and Mrs. Kermit Gaylor of Woodside Forest, Md., gave a surprise luncheon yesterday for their son George, who celebrated his eighteenth birthday.

The Gaylors also entertained at dinner last night on the Roger Smith roof for their son.

Miss Elizabeth Cabot Bradley Is Bride of John C. Sluder

Marjorie Cabot of Washington Is Flower Girl at Boston Wedding

In a 4 o'clock ceremony at the First Church in Boston, Mass., yesterday, Miss Elizabeth Cabot Bradley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Bradley of Boston, became the bride of John Cochrane Sluder, son of Mrs. Greenfield Sluder of St. Louis and the late Dr. Sluder. The Rev. Charles E. Park officiated at the ceremony and a reception followed at the home of the bride's grandfather, Godfrey Lowell Cabot, on Beacon Street.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a cream satin gown made on medieval lines, with a long, fitted bodice, a bouffant skirt and a deep bertha of rose point lace, worn by six generations of brides in her mother's family. The veil of white tulle fell from a Juliet cap of heirloom lace and she carried a bouquet of white roses and stephanotis.

The bride's sister, Miss Hannah Lowell Bradley, was the maid of honor. She wore an organdy gown of lettuce green, made with a short, fitted bodice and a full skirt. She carried a bouquet of celosia and blue lace flowers and wore a matching coronet in her hair.

Miss Marjorie Cabot, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Cabot of Washington, went up from the Capital to act as flower girl for her cousin and Miss Ellen Glessner, daughter of Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. John Glessner of Chestnut Hill, Pa., niece of the bridegroom, was the other flower girl. They wore salmon pink organdy dresses, made like that of the honor attendant and carried baskets of natural straw filled with sweetheart roses and ageratum. They wore wreaths of the same flowers in their hair.

Lieut. Comdr. John Glessner served his brother-in-law as best man and the ushers were Hyatt Mayor of New York, another brother-in-law, Samuel C. Davis; Charles E. Claggett of St. Louis, and Dr. Daniel Catlin of New York. The bride's uncle, Thomas D. Cabot, was also an usher.

The couple will make their home at 80 Beacon st., Boston, after September 15.

Ecuadoreans Are Honored At Luncheon

Two visitors in the Capital from Ecuador were honored yesterday at a luncheon given at the Mayflower by Gen. George C. Dunham, Director of the Health and Sanitation Division of the Office of the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs.

The honor guests, who are in this country at the invitation of the Coordinator's Office, are Dr. Izquieta Perez, Director General of Health of the Republic of Ecuador, and Dr. Cornelio Donoso, Director of the City Health Department of Quito, Ecuador.

Australia Votes On Continuing Curtin Regime

By the Associated Press

Melbourne, Australia (Saturday) Aug. 21.—Nearly 4,500,000 Australians, at home and on the war fronts, were voting today in a parliamentary election which either will return to power the Labor government headed by Prime Minister John Curtin or bring an anti-Labor coalition under Arthur Fadden which fell in October, 1941.

All 76 seats in the Australian House of Representatives and 19 of the 36 senatorships are being contested in the first general election in nearly three years.

The House of Representatives is composed of 36 laborites and an equal number of opposition members from the United Australia and country parties.

The balance of power—which overthrew Fadden and enabled Curtin's Labor government to retain control for 20 months—is in the hands of two Independents. The speaker does not vote except to break a tie, and the 76th member—a representative from Australia's northern territory—is entitled to vote only on issues affecting his district.

In the Senate, the opposition parties have had a majority of two.

Curtin announced the dissolution of the House June 25 after his administration was upheld on a vote of confidence by only one vote.

Results of the election may not be known for 10 days, since balloting among the commonwealth's 750,000 soldiers will be held on all the world's battlefronts.

33 Red Cross Workers Arrive Abroad Safely

Five American Red Cross field workers from the Washington area were among 33 whose safe arrival in Hawaii, England, Australia and India was reported yesterday by Eastern area headquarters in Alexandria, Va. They are: Dallett Jones of 2800 Woodley rd. nw., field director in England; Ann Moorhead of 2220 R st. nw., who is a former Navy Department employe, secretary in Hawaii; Mrs. Juanita J. Norwood of 5367 Blaine st. ne., who was formerly a dancing teacher and a WPB employe, assistant Negro program director in England; Margaret E. Smith of 4714 New Hampshire ave. nw., who at one time was a recreation worker for the Treasury Department, recreation work in Australia, and William W. Schwartzmann of 4608 Walsh st. Chevy Chase, Md., who was assistant State supervisor of the District WPA here, assistant field director in Calcutta, India.

WMC Forecast Is Outstripped By Navy Growth

Revised totals of naval personnel revealed yesterday that the Navy is growing at a faster rate than the War Manpower Commission had expected.

WMC calculations were based on having an Army of 8.2 million and a Navy of 2.6 million persons, or a total of 10.8 million persons by the end of the year.

Navy schedules, however, according to figures released by the Navy Department yesterday, call for having better than 2.8 millions in uniform by the end of the year, a discrepancy of some 200,000 persons. The Navy's totals are expected by December 31 to be:

Navy 201,000 officers and 2,093,000 enlisted men; Marine Corps, 29,700 officers and 370,000 enlisted men; Coast Guard, 10,500 officers and 161,000 enlisted men.

Musician Union Members Win Higher Scale

A new scale of payment for members of the Washington Musicians' Local Union No. 161 has been approved by the board of directors.

Friday and Saturday night dance operators will pay more under the new schedule. Where time of playing on dance engagements exceeds 15 minutes, or intervals are less than three minutes, such work shall be paid for at the rate of $1 per hour or fraction from the actual time continuous playing begins.

In the case of prolonged playing at sports events, the directors urged adding extra musicians rather than increase the rate. Opera and ballet musicians are to be given an increase of 10 per cent. It was decided to continue free service to the Stage Door Canteen.

Paul J. Schwartz, president of the union, has been asked to serve in an advisory capacity with OPA and hopes to have musicians declared essential so they may get gasoline and thereby cut the costs of their volunteer efforts at various camps and entertainments by the elimination of rail travel.

G. U. Gymnasium Is Threatened By Brush Fire

The Georgetown University gymnasium was threatened by flames yesterday afternoon when a brush fire got out of control.

The fire, started by soldiers of the Army's specialized training program at the school, who were cleaning up the grounds, spread from the rear of Copley Hall to the historic grave yard where 150 faculty members are buried. Dead underbrush and several live trees were burned.

'The Bell' Tolls Here September 15 at Palace

By Marjorie Kelly

YOU'VE BEEN WAITING to hear when you'd get a look at that much-talked-of film, "For Whom the Bell Tolls." Carter Barron, division manager of Loew's Theaters, comes up with the answer—September 15th. It will be a bond premiere with all seats reserved, the admissions ranging from $18.75 war bonds to $10.000 bonds. The event will be part of the Third War Loan activities of Loew's Theaters. So now you know. In a little less than a month you will be able to see for yourself about the reportedly magnificent performance of Ingrid Bergman, about the Greek actress, Paxinou; about the frequently-criticized walking-on-eggs policy toward fascism which is evidenced by Paramount in this film—you can check it all yourself September 15 at Loew's Palace.

Johnny Puleo, of whom I told you the other day, is down at Loew's Capitol in the new stage show which accompanies "Above Suspicion" in its second week there. The tiny D. C. native turns out to be the center of all the roughhousing which passes for comedy in the Minevitch Harmonica Rascals act.

The other seven Rascals, you see, are almost twice as tall as little Mr. Puleo, so it's inevitable that the act should mainly involve Johnny's being pushed around by the other Rascals, and then the other Rascals being pushed around by Johnny. It's funnier than it sounds. One of the great appeals to the American sense of humor is the figure of the worm that turns, the wistful little guy who begins as underdog and comes out on top. That's Johnny and the audiences seem to like him. The children, particularly, crow with delight every time he pushes or gets pushed.

More interesting than the horseplay, though there's less of it, is the harmonica group's harmonica playing. They do some amazing things with their instrumepts, which are of many different sizes and shapes. I liked their rendition of "Brazil." A neat trick is their tuning up—which sounds incredibly like a symphony orchestra tuning up. Neat, too, is the fact that they do not announce, "Now we are going to sound like a symphony orchestra tuning up." They just do it, and then get busy pushing Johnny.

Cynda Glenn, singer and comedienne, has the most weirdly flexible and muscular arms I ever hope to see, and she does some astonishing things with them. She also burlesques several songs, popular and otherwise, and if you like that sort of thing, you'll probably like the way she does it. She has a flair for wicked pantomime which is the best thing in her act.

Le Pelletier, a large blond and handsome young man, does a dance act with a docile and graceful little dog; Jimmy Edmonson has an unfunny skit he calls "School Daze;" The Marvellettes, girl acrobats, do acrobatics; Evalyn Tyner sings, and that's about it.

"Claudia," out at the Crossroads, has been having such a successful run that it will be played next week, too, Wednesday through Saturday, with the usual free performance for servicemen on Tuesday. Better make reservations ahead, the Crossroads people warn. By popular request, I'll give you that telephone number again—it's Glebe 1380.

Principals in Gehrig Film

TERESA WRIGHT AND GARY COOPER above, as they appear in "Pride of the Yankees," the film biography of the late Lou Gehrig. Cooper plays the baseball hero, and Miss Wright is cast as his wife.

'Pride of the Yankees,' Gehrig Story, on Metropolitan Screen

By Angele de T. Gingras

The story of Lou Gehrig which began playing at the Metropolitan yesterday, starring Gary Cooper, is a story for the "little" people of the land.

It is the tale of everybody's hero, the baseball player. When he hits a home run the ball doesn't go into the grandstand to be caught by one man. It goes into every drug store, every house, every shoe-shine stand, every pool parlor, every newspaper, and into the voice of every news commentator.

The movie is a tear jerker. All the sentimental devices of a boyhood off Amsterdam ave. in New York with vacant lots, a basement apartment, a devoted ambitious mother who is a cook, and a father who doesn't take kindly to work, make up the early part of the hero's life.

An Alger Yarn

In college all the Alger book devices of the sincere poor-but-proud-and-smart hero who punches the fraternity snob, waits table, makes good on the baseball and football field are true to the best Americana of rags to riches.

From success in college our hero climbs up and beyond on the wings of baseball. He is offered a place on the New York Yankees team. He takes it to pay his mother's hospital bill and makes good. He becomes the Nation's hero and all the trappings of success are screen-paraded before the audience's eyes. There are baseball games and cheering and Lou making two home runs for a little crippled boy in the hospital to the shouts of the multitude.

The only thing which Sam Wood, the director, missed is showing Lou's picture on the baseball cards which small boys save and swap. That would have given that rounded artistic quality which might have been described as . . . trading baseball hero's pictures and then getting on them yourself. Lou also marries the most beautiful girl in Chicago.

The picture is raw Alger but there is one thing which saves it and crowds the movie houses. We Americans like it. It is the real story of Lou Gehrig, the man who has become the symbol of our American legend, you can get anything you want if you want it bad enough and have a good baseball slugging arm.

The faces of the audience in the theater all looked as if they wanted to run up to Gary Cooper at the very last and kiss him. There were handkerchiefs pulled out all over the theater when Cooper who had become almost perfectly identified with the American hero, Lou Gehrig, walked off the baseball field and through the door under the stands.

Starlet's Biggest Ambition Realized

Hollywood—Next to becoming a movie star, the biggest ambition now of Beverly Hudson, 13-year-old film singer, is to be a real air-raid warden.

Four of the crew members of Paramount's "True to Life" company were telling plans for a huge parade of air-raid wardens in Inglewood in which they were to participate. Beverly, who has a featured role in the picture which stars Mary Martin, Franchot Tone, Dick Powell and Victor Moore, spoke up and said that she had seen many parades but never had been in one.

Promptly she was invited to ride in the Inglewood procession, which she did. She had the time of her life in the parade and is now an honorary warden, to boot.

—LEONARD LYONS—

The Fly On the Wall

(Leonard Lyons is on vacation. His guest columnist today is the famed Hungarian playwright, Ferenc Molnar.)

The following rather bitter anecdote is a memory out of World War I:

The staff of the Austrian army corps to which I was attached as a war correspondent in 1915 had the reputation of maintaining an excellent cuisine. For months throughout the hot summer the army lay idle, dug in on one of the salients in Russia. Days passed without so much as the bark of a cannon. The staff officers read novels, wrote lengthy letters and staged races.

FERENC MOLNAR

And the food kept getting better all the time. There were two tables in the officers' mess; a large table, seating 35 "little people" and a smaller one, presided over by the commanding general, where ten of the headquarters staff took their meals, with myself as a guest.

The food was good at the large table, too; but the small general's table easily vied with the most famous hostelries in Vienna.

Seated beside me at the table was a young lieutenant, who represented the sardonic philosophy of life in that small and select gathering. He had no end of fun over my meticulous habit of keeping a diary. One day he said to me at dinner:

"Here's one for your diary. The reason our food is so delectable is that we have two cooks, both of whom are in dread of dying. By cooking so well they hope to do all their soldering in the kitchen, and so avoid the battle front."

We had cake every Sunday. One of our two cooks was a pastry cook by trade. Evidently he feared death more than the other, for he outshone himself. The most amazing architectural condiments rose in splendor over his pastries. Once it was a church, complete with tiny Gothic towers. Another time a sculptured hunting scene, with woods, hunter and deer made of sugar. Then, again, a castle, with lighted casements, and a live bird in the turret, that flew away as we raised the roof.

But the crowning glory of all was a gutted sugar fac-simile of the famous fortress of Przemysl, shot to near rubble, and livid with flames. The general was ecstatic. We ate Przemysl, extinguished the lighted brandy and drank it. The cook was at the peak of his career and personal security. The lieutenant whispered in my ear:

"Put this in your diary: "Guaranteed effective against danger of death in time of war, a live bird, sealed in a candy tower."

Then the following happened: The chief of our corps staff, Colonel Count L., a conceited, haughty, rather obtuse aristocrat, had a beautiful big dog he dearly loved. The dog had a repertory of all sorts of tricks, but the colonel was particularly proud of the way the dog would leap to an amazing height and snap if shown a fly on the wall. The dog did this with such lightning speed that the fly never had a chance to get away. This was one of our daily diversions throughout the long lull.

On my way to dinner one day I saw a sizable crowd outside the officers' mess. Young officers, in a body, were laughing aloud. Stepping up beside them, I saw that the dog kept lunging without letup at a big fly, high up on the wall, without, however, downing it, even though the fly itself never flew away. Leaning against the wall, our famous pastry cook kept calling to the dog: "Snap the fly!"

The joke was, simply, that the fly was no real fly. The pastry cook had drawn it with his pencil, well up on the whitewashed wall. The fly had a head, wings, and six feet. The dog had made some hundred futile leaps after the fly. He was half dead with exhaustion.

The officers laughed, the dog leaped time and again, as the cook called, "Snap the fly!" All at once there was an end to the laughter. The colonel had come and seen. He called the dog, trembling with excitement and fatigue. The colonel's face was livid with rage, his eyes shot out glints of lightning. He looked straight at the stiffly saluting pastry cook, and said:

"You are an idiot!"

There was a deadly silence. The colonel was carrying a short riding crop. It shook in his hand now—no more than a tuning fork responding to a tap, but all understood what had flashed through the colonel's mind for an instant.

About a week later an order came from the high command, calling for a complete list of all expendables currently attached to army staffs, and their immediate transfer to the front lines. Shortly afterward our artistic, elaborate pastries came to a sudden end. Said the lieutenant:

"To be entered in your diary: Most dangerous to life and limb in time of war is the act of drawing flies, in pencil, on house walls."

If I were writing a short story, instead of quoting my diary, I might end by having the pastry cook killed in action. The truth, however, is that I've lost track of him completely. Moreover, I am mindful of Maeterlinck's admonition, contained in the preface to one of his books: "The author ought never yield to the temptation to enlarge upon the truly wondrous by miracles of his own invention."

—HEDDA HOPPER—

Canteen 'Hellzapoppin'

Hollywood, Calif., Aug. 20.—"Hellzapoppin" came to the Hollywood canteen when Olsen and Johnson initiated a jitterbug hurdle race. Jitterbugs didn't leap and hurdle—they got under. Each time 'round, it was lowered, until it was a foot and a half from the floor. Only one thin sailor and his partner, Joan Singer, got through. They slid on their backs instead of the other way 'round. It was hilarious—with Olsen and Johnson giving cash prizes for contestants. Jimmy Durante brought his old partner, Eddie Jackson, also Drummer Jack Rose, who's been with him 29 years. The 35 Goldwyn beauties are really breathtaking. The one redhead raised the temperature 20 points. I don't know how Sam does it, but he keeps on finding the prettiest faces ever seen, and he's been doing it for 25 years.

RISE STEVENS

RKO's Got the Irish

Talk about actors getting together—they've got nothing on musicians. Stravinsky, the Artur Rubensteins, and Thomas Beechcham had a talk fest in Charles Mendl's garden with Rise Stevens, with 150 friends trying to get a word in edgewise . . . Boston will run a whole week's circus to help build a memorial for the five Sullivan brothers. There are seven more columns of Sullivans in the telephone directory there than there are Smiths or Joneses. And speaking of the Irish, RKO's got a list that would choke a horse. There's Elaine Reilly, Dorothy Maloney, Don Douglas, Carol Gallagher, Dorothy Kelly, Margie Stewart, Mary Halsey, Marcy McGuire, Dawn Kennedy, Shirly O'Hara, Alan Carney and Patty Brill. They're even beginning to call Eddie Ruben "O'Ruben."

Short Shorts

Veronica Lake wouldn't leave the hospital until she had a full set of mourning. She's forgotten all about it now, and is wearing cotton peasant things that make her look like a stray refugee from an orphanage . . . Leon Errol is dedicating his autobiography, "Two Score," to Flo Ziegfeld . . . Every time you think Bill Saroyan's "Get Along Old Man" is buried, it pops up with a new producer—this time George Abbott . . . Basil Rathbone was flown to March Field in a bomber to put on a show for Officers' Club there, and coming home, searchlights found that bomber. "It's the most terrifying experience I've ever had," said Basil.

Most Misunderstood People in the World

Hollywood—Said Newsman Jimmy Young, out here as technical adviser on the first movie exposing the real Japan, the Japs are the "most misunderstood people in the world."

"Don't get me wrong, though," said Young. "What I mean is, they had the world completely fooled."

American correspondent in Tokyo 13 years, once imprisoned there 61 days for daring to write the truth about the Japs in China, Young came here as technical adviser on the filming of RKO Radio's "Behind The Rising Sun."

It is based on his own best-seller expose of Japan, poses Margo as a Jap girl, Tom Neal and J. Carroll Naish as highly placed Japs, Gloria Holden as an American newspaper woman in the Orient. Robert Ryan, Don Douglas, George Givot, other prominent players are in the cast.

It was on the filming of scenes showing the Japs torturing Margo, Miss Holden, Ryan and Douglas that Jimmy Young was adamant in insisting no punches be pulled.

"The western world misunderstood the Japs," said he. "We all thought of them as a kind of cute little people devoted to kimonas and cherry blossoms. Actually, as I learned during my years in Japan, for sheer ruthlessness and treachery they are unmatched in history."
